VOTERS' LIST, 1915

Municipality of the Township of Richmond, County of Lennox and Addington.

Notice is hereby given that I have transmitted or delivered to the persons mentioned in Section 9 of the Ontario Voters' List Act, the copies required by the said sections to be so delivered or transmitted of the list made pursuant to the said Act of all persons appearing by the last revised Assessment Roll of the said Municipality to be entitled to vote in the said Municipality at elections for members of the Legislative Assembly, and at Municipal Elections, and that the said list was first posted up in

WAR SUMMARY OF THE LATEST EVENTS

"We shall not dishonor the Russian land," says Czar Nicholas in the manifesto announcing that he has taken over the command of Russia's field armies; "we shall fulfill our sacred duty to defend our country to the last." Whatever the removal of the Grand Duke Nicholas means, it does not mean that Russia is tired of the war and looking for an easy way out. Georges Clemenceau, one of France's greatest statesmen, who has special facilities for learning what is going on in Russia, says it means that the Czar has cast aside the Bureaucracy and is putting himself at the head of a defensive organization of the entire Russian people. "We can confidently expect the happiest results," says M. Clemenceau, "from the Czar's boldness in smashing the Bureaucracy and placing himself at the head of a new Russia. He has given full liberty for the most violent criticisms in the Russian press; he desires to work hand-in-hand with the Russian people for the defence of the fatherland, and everyone knows the new government is being formed with energetic men who will keep in close touch with the Duma." Clemenceau is a radical. He evidently believes the shake-up means that the war, which was begun by the Czar and the Bureaucracy, is to be carried to a successful completion by the Czar and the people.

The Germans have occupied Wolkowysk, an important railway centre some 50 miles east of Bialystok, on the line leading to Minsk, but at all other points their advance goes slowly, and is being held up by the fall rains as well as by the vigorous defence of the Russians. The Petrograd Bourse Gazette states that the invaders are now opposed by and army which is stronger than when it fell back from the Vistula. The Russian artillery was saved in that retreat, and there is now available, to quote the words of the Bourse Gazette, "an abundant supply of ammunition." It is explained that the guns taken by the Germans at Kovno and Novo Georgievsk were deliberately abandoned because their removal would have interfered with the retirement of the infantry. "There is no lack of cannon," declares this responsible Petrograd journal. That is good news indeed. If the Russians have plenty of guns and ample supplies of projectiles the efforts of Von Hindenberg to get across the Dvina should not only be frustrated, but should be made terribly costly to the German engineer corps engaged in pontooning operations. Altogether the situation on the eastern front is far more favorable to the Allies than anyone could have anticipated a month ago.

The enemy Wednesday tried once more without success to break through the French lines in the western Argonne. The midnight French official report states that Wednesday morning, "after a very intense bombardment, made with concentrated shells, with the Turkish armies recalled to entire Turkish defence would speedily collapse for lack of technical skill German brains and Turkish brave have made a most efficient combination on the ridges of the Gallipoli Peninsula.

A second Zeppelin raid upon England within twenty-four hours is probably Germany's answer to the vigorous aerial offensive of the Allies on the continent. But there is this difference between the German methods and those of the British and French aviators: the Zeppelin attack after dark and even if their bomb-throwers desired to strike only at places of military importance they could not see their bombs. They sail over the countryside in the dark until they come to some centre of population and drop their incendiary or explosive shells at random. That is why for the most part the victims are women and children asleep in their bedrooms. The raids undoubtedly cause terror on the east coast, but it must not be forgotten that more people were done to death by the single torpedo which sank the Lusitania than are likely to be killed by Zeppelin raids extending over a decade. The airmen of the Allies have, doubtless, killed some women and children in Germany, but it has not been by deliberate design, but because they were in or near to railway stations, tracks or military establishments and factories that were legitimate objects of aerial attacks.

The Austrians claim that their advance in Volhynia continues over a front of almost sixty miles, but Vienna official report adds that "the Sereth river severe fighting has developed. With superior forces the enemy broke forth from the bridge head fortifications near Tarnopol and Strusow. German counter-attacks repulsed the Russians." This proves that the Kaiser's Generals have let some leaven in the Austrian army in Galicia. It will be needed before long.

deed. If the Russians have plenty of guns and ample supplies of projectiles the efforts of Von Hindenberg to get across the Dvina should not only be frustrated, but should be made terribly costly to the German engineer corps engaged in pontooning operations. Altogether the situation on the eastern front is far more favorable to the Allies than anyone could have anticipated a month ago.

The enemy Wednesday tried once more without success to break through the French lines in the western Argonne. The midnight French official report states that Wednesday morning, "after a very intense bombardment, largely with asphyxiating shells, the Germans initiated an attack headed by two divisions—40,000 men—against our positions. At some points they entered our advance trenches. We counter-attacked them vigorously. They failed in the new attempt to break our front." The battle described in these few words must have been an important and sanguinary struggle, in which from 80,000 to 100,000 men took part. The result is an addition to the long list of failures marked up against the German Crown Prince, who for a year has been trying to force his way through the Argonne Forest so that he could surround Verdun and secure the bridges and fords of the Meuse, thus making possible an eastern entrance into France from the German bases in Lorraine.

Much of the aerial activity on both sides along the western front is taking place in Lorraine. The Germans Wednesday morning threw bombs into Nancy, whereupon a French aerial squadron retaliated upon the military establishments at Frescaty and upon the Sablonne railway station at Metz. There were other aerial raids Wednesday chiefly by the allied airmen, who bombarded the German aviation camp at Ostend and the lines of communication of the Crown Prince's army at Dieuze and St. Medard, in the northern Argonne. The artillery actions along the front continue.

Unofficial despatches regarding the Italian operations on the northern part of the Isonzo front and in the Trentino speak of important advances in the course of which 900 prisoners were taken. The official despatch issued in Rome Wednesday night does not confirm these statements. It states that "in Cadore we undertook an offensive along the whole Monte Croce-Cornelico Pass front, and captured several positions and a number of trenches. Owing to the Austrians' tremendously fortified position, however, our offensive was arrested."

The Austrian aeroplanes are kept busy along the Isonzo as well as in the raiding of Italian cities. Wednesday an Austrian aerial squadron attacked the Italian aviation base on the lower Isonzo, throwing 37 bombs. No damage was sustained by the bombardment. During the second raid the Italian airmen rose and engaged the enemy, who then bombarded the Italian camp, killing three soldiers. The aviators in the Italian sphere of operations seem to be fairly well matched, and with the addition of the French airmen who have been sent to aid her, Italy should be able to secure ascendancy in the air very soon and put an end to the Austrian raids from Pola.

Information which has reached Rome from Constantinople states that the Turkish losses in the Dardanelles campaign now total 250,000, and that there is much gloom in the capital, where the German officers are demanding that they be permitted to go home and fight for their native land. Whatever the attitude of Enver Pasha and the Young Turks may be, there is no reason to doubt that the people generally would be glad to see the last of them. It is probable, however, that were the German officers now

Town Council

Council Chambers.
Napanee, Sept. 7th, 1915.

Council met in regular session on Tuesday evening, Mayor Gibbard presiding.

Members present—Reeve Denison, and Councillors Winters, Wiseman, Waller, Dickinson, Osborne.

The minutes of the last two special sessions were read, and on motion were confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From F. W. Barrett, thanking the Council for their expression of confidence in appointing him as Chief of Police. Ordered filed.

From W. G. Wilson, informing the Council that C. H. Spencer had consulted him re the obstructions placed on the Swing Bridge by the Street Superintendent. The obstructions referred to were scantlings nailed to the floor which created a hump and was a nuisance to vehicle drivers. Mr. Spencer also had a spring broken while crossing one of these humps, the expense being $5.75 to repair. He did not ask for damages, but would take action if the nuisance was not removed.

The Council was informed that the above had been attended to, and the bridge was now in a satisfactory condition.

Applications for the position of Nightwatchman were received from Messrs. Silas Woodcock, Gideon Garrison, H. Meng, E. B. Perry and Robt. J. Blackadder.

Moved by Councillor Waller, seconded by Councillor Walters, that the above applications be laid on the table until the Order of New Business. Carried.

Councillor Wiseman, Chairman of the Finance Committee, reported that the bulk of the taxes had been paid in. There were about $300.00 still unpaid, but this would be reduced in a few days.

Reeve Denison (acting for the H. Meng) reported: (a) Re building of a cement walk on the west side of Donald street south of Bridge street; (b) Asking where the Council wished the County grant expended; (c) Re building of a cement walk to the Swing Bridge on the north side of the river. Laid on the table until later in the evening.

Councillor Osborne, Chairman of the Town Property Committee, asked that the agreement between Mr. Kellar and the town, for the caretaking of the Disposal Works, be signed by the Mayor and Clerk. He also reported that the seats in the Town Hall had been repaired at a cost of $33.00, and 251 new chairs purchased. They now had about 50 more chairs than they could utilize, and asked what would he do with them. Several complaints had been received re the unsanitary condition of the Disposal Works, and, in company with Dr. Cowan, Medical Officer of Health, he had inspected the plant and found everything in first-class working order and in splendid condition. He did not think the

RIGA AGAIN IN DANGER

Russian Baltic Port Menaced
by German Advance.

Germans Still Hold Important Bridgehead Which Cuts Off City Railway Communication With South—Frederick Rennett S.
Teutonic Drive is Slackening
Under Russian Resistance.

LONDON, Sept. 7.—The menace
Riga, the important Russian seaport in the Baltic, is becoming more serious. The Germans still hold bridgehead at Friedrichstadt, the capture of which effectively cuts Riga's railway communication to south, while German aircraft are active in the gulf, perhaps presag-ing another naval clash as part of a certified German move from land sea to complete the isolation of city and force its abandonment the Russians.

According to an unofficial Be-despatch, received by way of Copenhagen, the Germans claim possession of the gulf, the Russians have abandoned Dagoe, the northernmost of the three islands just outside gulf.

Fighting on both wings of the ern front proceeds with much greater vigor than the struggle in the center where the invaders apparently having difficulties in tract swamps. In the south near the Gulf border fortune fluctuates, on one side and then the other claim successes. The main offensive, however, still lies with the Austrians Germans.

Frederick Fennett, cabling from Petrograd, says:

There are signs of a temporary check to the German advance. Evidently the Germans are expending last force in their wave of advance in the extreme localization of all operations. These are limited to places where either the Russian or German line departs from a general due north and south direction.

The Emperor has left to join army in the field.

The Germans are projecting to east near Riga and the Russians moving to the west at Grodno and the extreme south. In the latter the Russians are completing a prepared retirement most successful.
They are again able to report capture of more than 3,000 prisoners.

The main interest yesterday centered in the attempt of the Germans to cut off the Russian forces at Grodno. Simultaneously with the cutting of the Grodno-Vilna railway at Orsha and the advance from Bielsostok the railway running south from Grodno the position seemed serious. The Russian advance along the Vilna, however, made it serious for northern group of Germans. It seems clear that unless the Germans succeed in reaching and crossing River Rossa as well as the Nier their attempted encircling movement will fail, if it has not already failed.
The number of Russians still operating in the Grodno district has greatly exaggerated.

In the Riga district the German advance to Friedrichstadt on the Dvina has been answered by the Russians recrossing the river 15 miles down.

The Germans are far east of Riga but in so narrow a wedge they feel uneasy about their communications.

termined effort on their part

U. S. HOPES DESTROYED.

Situation at Washington is Now as Bad as After Arabic War: Sunk.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—That the torpedoing of the Albatross liner Hesperian by a German submarine has destroyed at one blow the beautiful structure of peace and amity built up in Washington during the last two weeks through the efforts of the German Ambassador is the belief in Washington.

Officials were dismayed at the first reports of the torpedoing of the Hesperian, and permitted themselves the hope that these were not true until an official report was received from Consul Frost at Queenstown this evening.

It is now regarded that matters stand exactly where they did after the Arabic was sunk by a German submarine. This Government will look to Berlin to explain how it was that, while the German Ambassador here has represented that German submarines were not to attack liners without warning and without regard to those on board, twice within less than three weeks liners have been so attacked.

Flour Down 50 Cents.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 7.—A reduction of 50 cents per barrel on the price of flour went into effect yesterday. This follows a reduction of 70 cents per barrel that went into effect on Monday last, and brings the price of flour down to what it was at the outbreak of the war.

Butler and Bishop.

A former bishop of Bath and Wells loved to impress on his ordination candidates the importance of a thorough study of the "Analogy" of Bishop Butler. "Goodby, my dear young friend," he once said in taking leave of a student at the palace door and then earnestly added, "Whatever you do, don't forget the Butler." "Oh, my lord, I haven't," stammered out the youth, "I have just given him half a crown."—T. P.'s London Weekly.

TO ATTACK SMYRNA.

Italians Will Take Steps to Stop Persecution of Christians.

ROME, Sept. 7.—The Italian Premier has returned from the front. He will shortly preside at a most important Cabinet Council, which will be the prelude to imminent developments in the Aegean, especially at Smyrna, where terror reigns. Dispatches from there indicate that the Turks are desperate, savagely persecuting the Christians who have been interned, as well as all European Massacres are looked for at any moment.

Owing to the coal famine the city of Smyrna is in total darkness at night. Railway communications are partly stopped. The Anglo-French forces have been mysteriously reinforced recently, and their operations have been intensified along the coast of Asia Minor. Aeroplanes and torpedo-boat destroyers are incessantly bombarding the ports. The destruction of barracks and signal stations will compel the Turks to withdraw from the interior, it is expected.

Fell Under Train.

ST. MARY'S, Sept. 7.—Richard Birch, a prominent farmer living here, a few miles from here, was killed at the Grand Trunk station here Saturday night as he attempted to alight from passenger train No. 37 as the train was pulling out of the station. Birch, who was returning from Toronto, where he had been exhibiting live stock at the Nation Exhibition, lost his balance and fell under the wheels.

nka, however, made it serious for the German group of Germans. It also is clear that unless the Germans are checked in reaching and crossing the river Rosna as well as the Niemen, the attempted encircling movement will fail, if it has not already failed.
The number of Russians still operating in the Grodno district has been greatly exaggerated.

The Riga district the German advance to Friedrichstadt on the Dvina has been answered by the Russians moving the river 15 miles lower down.

The Germans are far east of Riga, in so narrow a wedge they must be uneasy about their communications.

They are likely to witness a determined effort on their part to break through.

TWENTY-SIX PERISHED

Death List on Hesperian Greater Than at First Believed.

One First, Six Second, and Six Third-
Cabin Passengers, and Thirteen
Members of Crew Lost Their Lives When a German Submarine Torpedoed Allan Liner on Saturday Night.

QUEENSTOWN, Sept. 7.—Six second-cabin passengers, six third-cabin passengers, and thirteen members of the crew of the Hesperian, torpedoed 150 miles off Queenstown Saturday evening, were unaccounted for last night, according to the revised official figures issued by the Allan Line. This brings the probable death list, including Miss Carbonnery of St. John's, Nfld., whose body is here, up to twenty-six. An eleven-month-old baby of Mrs. Jenkins, a passenger, is among the missing.

The captain of the stricken liner remained by his ship until it sank.
He declined to comment on the disaster for publication; hence the official statement as to whether he believes his ship was a victim of a torpedo or a mine must come from the Admiralty, although the captain is quoted as having told an Allan Line official to-day that the Hesperian was torpedoed.

Most of the survivors, passengers and crew, will leave Queenstown today by special train and boat for Liverpool.

Captain Main and the officers who remained aboard the steamer while efforts were being made to tow the liner to port were able to save some of their effects before the ship plunged to the bottom at 6.47 this morning seventy-eight miles southwest of Fastnet, not far from the scene of the attack, taking with her 3,545 bags of mail, much of it originating in neutral countries.

The flooding of the forward compartments, which caused the Hesperian to sink so much by the head as to throw the propellers out of the water, made the task of towing the liner to Queenstown impossible in the rough sea.

About 30 Canadian soldiers, who were wounded in battle in Flanders, were going home to recuperate. Most of the other passengers were Canadians, returning from a visit to England, or English people on their way to Canada to settle.

The torpedo struck the Hesperian in the forward engine-room, and the ship immediately began to settle by the head. Captain Main ordered the passengers and crew into the boats, but with his officers remained on the bridge, although at that time he must have felt sure that his ship would go down.

The discipline was perfect, but one of the boats, the falls of which became jammed, capsized, and those in her were thrown into the water. In the darkness confusion naturally prevailed, but all were picked up, and,
with other passengers and the crew, were transferred to the rescue steamers which arrived in answer to wireless calls for assistance.

A despatch from Queenstown says:
"Rescue boats with passengers and members of the crew of the Allan Line steamer Hesperian arrived here Sunday and told of the torpedoing of the liner Saturday evening by a German submarine off the south coast of Ireland."

CANADIANS HONORED.

Medals Conferred for Gallantry and Devotion to Duty.

LONDON, Sept. 7.—The following Canadian military honors were officially announced last night:

Major James Arthur Hesketh received the D.S.O. for conspicuous gallantry and devotion on a farm near Messines when he put out a fire in a munitions magazine.

Distinguished Conduct Medals are awarded as follows:

Pte. H. T. Cameron, No. 3 field ambulance, 1st division, for great bravery and devotion to duty at Festubert. He was the first volunteer to assist in collecting the wounded at the Orchard.

Squadron Sergt.-Major C. S. Collins, Strathcona's Horse, for gallantry when he assisted Major Hesketh.

Pte. Gledhill, 1st Battalion, for bravery at Givenchy, when lone-handed he captured a German trench.

Lance-Sergt. W. E. Hart, 4th Battalion, for gallantry, ability, and devotion to duty at Langemarck, when he carried messages under fire.

Color-Sergeant J. Hay, 8th Battalion, for gallantry at Festubert, when he took command of his company after the officers were killed.

Private E. H. Hester, 3rd Battalion, for gallantry and resource at Festubert, when as a bomb-thrower he did exceptionally good work.

Corporal S. G. Hobday, same Battalion, for gallantry at Givenchy, when he dug out a party of seven buried in a shell explosion.

Lance-Corporal H. W. King, 10th Battalion, for gallantry at Ypres in operating his field telephone.

Sergeant J. McDonald, Princess Pats, for gallantry near Hooge, for extricating wounded from a destroyed
trench.

Private J. W. McKie, 5th Battalion, for gallantry and resource at Festubert, when he attended to wounded and rendering first-aid under very heavy fire.

Sergeant D. Morris, King Edward
Horse, for gallantry near Festubert.
At a critical moment he brought up his section of Grenadiers to the assistance of a battalion which had lost a majority of its bombers.

Sergeant F. A. Mote, 3rd Battalion, for gallantry at Festubert, when he rescued an officer.

Company Sergeant-Major C. Owen, 1st Battalion, for gallantry and ability at Givenchy. When all the officers were killed he took command.

Corporal J. E. Palmer, 10th Battalion, for gallantry and ability at Festubert, when he took a machine gun to an advanced position.

Private H. Vincent, 1st Battalion, for bravery and devotion to duty at chine gun on his back and later

"PATIENCE" THE WORD.

Germans Face Disaster in Russia, Says French Critic.

PARIS, Sept. 7.—Writing in Preparazione, an Italian military organ, Colonel Barone, the great military critic, who recently visited Gen.
Joffre, makes the following disclosures:

"Some people, among them the French supreme command, think that in the present circumstances a general offensive on the western front can be delayed without inconvenience in order that once it is begun it can be carried out thoroughly without interruption."

"There also is an impatient minority, headed by some of the most prominent politicians, who believe that it is best to act quickly."

"The former are right. By pushing her advance into Russia Germany is marching to disaster, and it is far better for the allies to await this event and then strike."

"That is how the Franco-British commanders reason, and, far from believing that they are abandoned to their fate, the Russian General Staff think so, too."

"Joffre is not asleep. He deserves our entire and illimitable confidence."

SUBMARINE CABLES.

Placed End to End They Would Reach Halfway to the Moon.

The various governments of the world own together 880 cables, having a total length of 14,480 miles and containing 21,500 miles of conductors. The French government, which takes the lead as to length of cables, has 3,400 miles in fifty-four cables. As to number, the Norwegian government comes first, with 235 cables, having a total length of 248 miles. Finally, as to the length of conductors, the English government comes first, with 5,468 miles of conductors, divided among 115 cables, having a total length of 1,588 miles. Private companies to the number of twenty-eight own 288 cables, having a length of 120,864 miles and containing 127,632 miles of conductors.

The French companies, only two in number—the Compagnie Française du Télégraphe de Paris et New York and the Société Française des Télégraphes Sous-Marins—have eighteen cables with a total length of 7,249 nautical miles.
The most important of the private companies is the Eastern Telegraph company, which operates seventy-five cables, with a total length of 25,347 miles.
The total number of cables in the world is 1,168, with a total length of 140,347 miles and 149,193 miles of conductors. This is not sufficient to reach lial, if it has not already failed. A number of Russians still operating in the Grodno district has been exaggerated.

In the Riga district the German advance to Friedrichstadt on the Dvina has been answered by the Russians crossing the river 15 miles lower.

The Germans are far east of Riga, in so narrow a wedge they must be uneasy about their communications. We are likely to witness a determined effort on their part to strengthen their position south of Friedrichstadt, as for the moment it is more important to them than the eventual occupation of Riga. Whenever the Russians think it advisable to make a stand or advance they are fully able to do so, the strength of the opposing armies rapidly approaching equality.

Owing to the coal famine the city of Smyrna is in total darkness at night. Railway communications are completely stopped. The Anglo-French forces have been mysteriously reinforced recently, and their operations have been intensified along the coasts of Asia Minor. Aeroplanes and torpedo-boat destroyers are incessantly bombarding the ports. The destruction of barracks and signal stations will compel the Turks to withdraw to the interior, it is expected.

Fell Under Train.

ST. MARY'S, Sept. 7.—Richard Birch, a prominent farmer living at Anderson, a few miles from here, was killed at the Grand Trunk station here Saturday night as he attempted to alight from passenger train No. 1, as the train was pulling out of the station. Birch, who was returning from Toronto, where he had been exhibiting live stock at the National Exhibition, lost his balance and fell under the wheels.

Baby Found Drowned.

AURORA, Sept. 7.—A sad drowning accident occurred at Sutton, when Floyd Montgomery Scott, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Scott, Aurora, lost his life. The little lad was on long with his parents had been ending a few days at Sutton and went down to the river to play, and some way fell into the river, and was found floating on the water, dead.

Food For Punssters.

"Yes."
"He uses this new 'mathematical asceticity' system."

"Measurably so." — Cleveland Plain Dealer.

with other passengers and the crew, were transferred to the rescue steamers which arrived in answer to wireless calls for assistance.

A despatch from Queenstown says: "Rescue boats with passengers and members of the crew of the Allan Line steamer Hesperian arrived here Sunday and told of the torpedoing of the liner Saturday evening by a German submarine off the south coast of Ireland."

"The passengers were unanimous in declaring that the Hesperian was attacked in the gathering night without warning. The only person aboard the steamer who actually saw the underwater boat was a man on watch, who got a glimpse of it in the distance and reported the fact to Captain Main."

"The passengers declare that the steamer was down by the head when they last saw her, but that she was making her way slowly to Queenstown under her own steam."

Among the invalided Canadian soldiers on their way home was one who had lost his eyesight. The boat into which he was helped had previously capsized through the falls getting jammed and someone cutting the rope. This man was a good swimmer. He went down at first, but quickly came up and struck out bravely. Suddenly a cry from the half-darkness was heard: "I can see! I can see!" And it was true, the man had regained his eyesight.

All of the passengers pay the highest tribute to the efficiency of the crew and the coolness of Captain Main.

"Major Barre, of the 15th Canadians, who was accompanying 12 officers and 38 men who had been wounded back to Canada, said that there was no warning. He was corroborated by his wife, who was traveling with him, and by the invalided soldiers he was in charge of."

WELCOME FOR SIR ROBERT.

Prime Minister Warmly Greeted on Arrival in Ottawa.

OTTAWA, Sept. 7.—On his return home on Saturday from a visit to Great Britain and the battlefields of France, Sir Robert L. Borden, K.C., G.C.M.G., Prime Minister of Canada, was given a whole-hearted and enthusiastic welcome by thousands of the people of Ottawa, irrespective of party affiliations or leanings.

The formal welcome was expressed in behalf of the citizens by Mayor Porter through the medium of an address, which was read to Sir Robert before a gathering numbering thousands in front of the Chateau Laurier.

In reply the Premier expressed his appreciation of the warmth of the reception and the manifestations of good will extended to him. He told of the evidences he had seen both in Britain and on the western battle front, indicating the ultimate triumph of the cause of the allies and of the appreciation on every hand of what Canada and Canadians were contributing to this triumph.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. BOMBS DROPPED ON METZ.

French Air Squadron Takes Revenge for Luneville Attack.

PARIS, Sept. 7.—As a measure of reprisal for the bombardment by the enemy on Sept. 1 of the open town of Luneville, 40 French aeroplanes yesterday morning bombarded the station, works, and military establishment of Saarbrücken, east of Metz. The aviators noted that the results attained were considerable. It is officially charged that the four German airmen who bombarded Luneville, which is an open town where there is absolutely no military installation to destroy, clearly aimed at the populous section, and selected for the execution of their operations the day and the hour of the market. As a consequence there were many people killed, for the most part women and children. A German aeroplane has been obliged to land at Calais. The aviators were taken prisoner. Enemy aeroplanes have dropped bombs on St. Die without causing either loss of life or damage.

Violent artillery fighting continued Sunday night in the vicinity of Arras, Rocquincourt, and Bretoncourt, both German and French batteries taking part. There were also artillery exchanges in the Champagne district. Yesterday artillery duels continued along the whole front. In the sector to the north of Arras French batteries have inflicted heavy damage on the German trenches. In the Vosges combats by means of big bombs have been carried on.

The fact that the great artillery duel has continued for a fortnight unabated leads to the belief in some quarters that it may mean preparation for an allied offensive before the approach of cold weather. The lavish use of shells by the French would seem to indicate some great undertaking, but the plan is not yet apparent to the general public.

World's Longest Street.

In Seeborn's "Siberia in Asia" is thus described what is called the longest street in the world: "Siberia was half jestingly described to me as a big village, the main street of which, extending from Nishni-Novgorod to Kakh-ta, was about 5,000 miles long, where there were always half a million horses on the road and where everybody knew everybody from one end of the street to the other."

The Ancient Brahmins.

The Brahmins were the lawyers, priests, professors, the sole instructed class, the sole authorities on taste, morality, the sole depositaries of whatever stood in the place of science. Everybody was to minister unto them, everybody to give way to them. The Brahman was above the law. He was "not to be subjected to corporal punishment, must not be imprisoned or fined or exiled or reviled." In the law of the Vishnu it was written: "The Brahmins sustain the world. It is by the favor of the Brahmins that the gods reside in heaven." Under English rule and ideas the ancient caste has lost some of its prestige, but is still a forcible reminder of its former grandeur.—New York American.

An Early Legal Blunder.

Dyeing, or, at any rate, the madder root used in it, was the subject of one of the oddest of England's legislative blunders. In the reign of George III. it was found necessary to regulate the trade in madder, and accordingly an act was passed for that purpose. Tests of its purity were ordained, and various regulations spread the length of the act to over sixty sections. But when it was finally passed into law it was found that madder was not once mentioned by name in it. In fact, those called upon to administer it had no official knowledge of what the act was talking about.—London Telegraph.

Ironwork in India.

India was the first country which turned iron into weapons. Persia borrowed the art from India. The Rigveda, which is the oldest record in the world, gives evidence of this. So do also the Astras and Sastras of the Dharmashastra, and during the early part of the Christian era the Indian blade was the most used throughout the eastern and western world. This art reached its greatest perfection in northern India, the Punjab, Nepal, Rajputana, Gujarat and other provinces, where they still make beautiful arms.

SYNOPSIS.

In her apartment at the Leland Ella, daughter of Lord Ashleigh, is murdered and the Ashleigh diamond necklace stolen. The New York police place the case in the hands of Sanford Quest, known and feared as the master criminologist of the world. He takes Lenora, Ella's maid, to his own apartments and through hypnotism and the use of electro-telepathic appliances discovers her connection with the crime, recovers the diamonds and arrests the murderer, Macdougall, Lenora's husband, though nearly trapped to his death in a tough tenement house while engaged in the work.

SECOND INSTALLMENT.

"THE HIDDEN HANDS."

CHAPTER VI.

Sanford Quest and Lenora stood side by side upon the steps of the courthouse, waiting for the automobile, which had become momentarily entangled in a string of vehicles. A little crowd of people were elbowing their way out on to the sidewalk. The faces of most of them were still shadowed by the three hours of tense drama from which they had just emerged. Quest, who had lit a cigar, watched them curiously.

"No need to go into court," he remarked. "I could have told you, from the look of these people, that Macdougall had escaped the death sentence. They have paid their money—or rather their time, and they have been cheated of the one supreme thrill."

"Imprisonment for life seems terrible enough," Lenora whispered, shuddering.

"Can't see the sense of keeping such a man alive myself," Quest declared, with purposeful brutality. "It was a cruel murder, fiendishly committed."

They were on the point of crossing the pavement toward the automobile when Quest felt a touch upon his shoulder. He turned and found Lord Ashleigh standing by his side. Quest glanced towards Lenora.

"Run and get in the car," he whispered. "I will be there in a moment."

"I would not have stopped you just now, Mr. Quest," said Lord Ashleigh. "but my brother is very anxious to renew his acquaintance with you. I think you met years ago."

Sanford Quest held out his hand to the man who had been standing a little in the background. Lord Ashleigh turned towards him.

"This is Mr. Quest, Edgar. You may remember my brother—Professor Ashleigh—as a man of science, Quest? He has just returned from South America."

The two shook hands, curiously diverse in type, in expression, in all the appurtenances of manhood.

"I am very proud to make your acquaintance again, professor," Quest said. "Glad to know, too, that you hadn't forgotten me."

"Nothing has happened, sir," he replied. "The telephone is ringing in the study now, though."

"I will answer it myself," the professor declared, bustling off.

The professor took up the receiver from the telephone. His "Hello!" was mild and inquiring. He had no doubt that the call was from some admiring disciple. The change in his face as he listened, however, was amazing.

"George," he gasped, "the greatest tragedy in the world has happened! My ape is stolen!"

His brother looked at him blankly. "Your ape is stolen?" he repeated. "The skeleton of my anthropoid ape," the professor continued, his voice growing alike in sadness and firmness. "It is the curator of the museum who is speaking. They have just opened the box. It has lain for two days in an anteroom. It is empty!"

Lord Ashleigh muttered something a little vague. The theft of a skeleton scarcely appeared to his unscientific mind to be a realizable thing. The professor turned back to the telephone.

"Mr. Francis," he said, "I cannot talk to you. I can say nothing. I shall come to you at once. I am on the point of starting. Your news has overwhelmed me."

He laid down the receiver. He looked around him like a man in a nightmare.

"The taxicab is waiting, sir," Craig reminded him.

"That is most fortunate," the professor pronounced. "I remember now that I had no change with which to pay him. I must go back. Look after my brother. And, Craig, telephone at once to Mr. Sanford Quest. Ask him to meet me at the museum in twenty minutes. Tell him that nothing must stand in the way. Do you hear?"

The taxicab man drove off, glad enough to have a return fare. In about half an hour's time the professor strode up the steps of the museum and hurried into the office. There was a little crowd of officials there, whom the curator at once dismissed. He rose slowly to his feet. His manner was grave and bewildered.

"Professor," he said, "we will waste no time in words. Look here!"

He threw open the door of an anteroom behind his office. The apartment was unfurnished except for one

"The right hand."

Quest examined the fastenings of the window before which he paused during his previous examination. He turned away with a shrug of the shoulders.

"See you later, Mr. Ashleigh," he concluded laconically.

A newsboy thrust a paper at them. Quest glanced at the headlines. Lenora clutched at his arm. Together they read it in great black type:

CHAPTER VII.

The windows of Mrs. Rheinholdt's town house were ablaze with light. A crimson druggot stretched down the steps to the curbstone. A long row of automobiles stood waiting. Through the wide-lung door was visible a pleasant impression of flowers and light and luxury. In the nearer of the two large reception rooms Mrs. Rheinholdt herself, a woman dark, handsome and in the prime of life, was standing to receive her guests. By her side was her son, whose twenty-first birthday was being celebrated.

"I wonder whether that professor of yours will come?" she remarked, as the stream of incoming guests slackened for a moment.

"He hates receptions," the boy replied, "but he promised he'd come. I never thought, when he used to drill science into us at the lectures, that he was going to be a tremendous big pot."

Mrs. Rheinholdt's plump finger toyed for a moment complacently with the diamonds which hung from her neck.

"You can never tell in a world like this," she murmured.

"Here he is, mother!" the young man exclaimed suddenly. "Good old boy! I thought he'd keep his word."

Mrs. Rheinholdt assumed her most encouraging and condescending smile as she held out both hands to the professor.

"It is perfectly sweet of you, professor," Mrs. Rheinholdt declared.

Mrs. Rheinholdt breathed a sigh of relief as she greeted her new arrivals.

The professor made himself universally agreeable in a mild way, and his presence created even more than the sensation which Mrs. Rheinholdt had hoped for. In her desire to show him ample honor she seldom left his side.

"I am going to take you into my husband's study," she suggested, later on in the evening. "He has some specimens of beetles—"

"Beetles," the professor declared, with some excitement, "occupied precisely two months of my time while abroad. By all means, Mrs. Rheinholdt!"

"We shall have to go quite to the back of the house," she explained, as she led him along the darkened passages.

The professor smiled acquiescently. His eyes rested for a moment upon her necklace.

"You must really permit me, Mrs. Rheinholdt," he exclaimed, "to admire your wonderful stones. I am a judge of diamonds, and those three or four in the center are, I should judge, unique."

"I wonder where mother is?" he marked. "She told me—"

The young man broke off in the middle of his sentence. He, too, like many others in the room, felt a sudden thrill almost of horror at the sound which rang without warning upon their ears—a woman's cry, cry of fear and horror. Mrs. Rheinholdt, her hands clasping her neck, her splendid composure a thing of the past, a panic-stricken, terrified woman, stumbled into the room. It seemed on the point of collar. Somehow or other, they got her in an easy chair.

"My jewels!" she cried. "My diamonds!"

"What do you mean, mother?" Philip Rheinholdt asked quickly. "Has your lost them?"

"Stolen!" Mrs. Rheinholdt shrieked. "Stolen there in the conservatory!"

They gazed at her open-mouthed, incredulous. Then a still, quiet voice from the outside of the little circle intervened.

"Instruct your servants, Mr. Rheinholdt, to lock and bar all the doors of the house," the professor suggested. "No one must leave it until we have heard your mother's story."

"I had just taken the professor to the little room my husband used to call the museum," Mrs. Rheinholdt explained, her voice still shaking with agitation. "I left him there to examine some specimens of beetles. I thought that I would come back through the conservatory, which the quickest way. I was about to take the switch go behind me and all the electric lights were turned out. I couldn't imagine what had happened. While I hesitated I saw—"

She broke down again. There was no doubt about the genuineness of terror.

"I saw a pair of hands—just hands—no arms—nothing but hands—coming out of the darkness! They gripped me by the throat, I suppose it was just for a second. I think—I lost consciousness for a moment, although I was still standing up. The next thing I remember is that I found my shrieking and running here—and jewels are gone!"

"You saw no one?" her son asked incredulously. "You heard nothing?"

"I heard no footsteps, I saw no one," Mrs. Rheinholdt repeated. The professor turned away.

"If you will allow me," he began, "I am going to telephone to my friend Mr. Sanford Quest, the criminologist."

the in the background. Lord Ashleigh turned towards him.

"This is Mr. Quest, Edgar. You may remember my brother—Professor Ashleigh—as a man of science, Quest? He has just returned from South America."

The two shook hands, curiously diverse in type, in expression, in all the appurtenances of manhood.

"I am very proud to make your acquaintance again, professor," Quest said. "Glad to know, too, that you hadn't forgotten me."

"My dear sir," the professor declared, as he released the other's hand with seeming reluctance, "I have thought about you many times. Your doings have always been of interest to me."

"I am sorry," Quest remarked, "that our first meeting here should be under such distressing circumstances!"

The professor nodded gravely.

"If you'll excuse me, professor," said Quest. "I think I must be getting along. We shall meet again, I trust."

"One moment," the professor begged, eagerly. "Tell me, Mr. Quest—I want your honest opinion. What do you think of my ape?"

"Of your what?" Quest inquired dubiously.

"Of my anthropoid ape which I have just sent to the museum. You know my claim? But perhaps you would prefer to postpone your final decision until after you have examined the skeleton itself."

A light broke in upon the criminologist.

"Of course!" he exclaimed. "For the moment, professor, I couldn't follow you. You are talking about the skeleton of the ape which you brought home from South America, and which you have presented to the museum here?"

"Naturally," the professor assented, with mild surprise. "To what else? I am stating my case, Mr. Quest, in the North American Review next month; I may tell you, however, as a fellow scientist, the great and absolute truth. My claim is incontestible. My skeleton will prove to the world, without a doubt, the absolute truth of Darwin's great theory."

"That so?"

"You must go and see it," the professor insisted. "You shall be permitted a special examination."

"Very kind of you," Quest murmured.

"We shall meet again soon, I hope," the professor concluded cordially. "Good-morning, Mr. Quest!"

The two men shook hands and Quest took his seat by Lenora's side in the automobile. The professor rejoined his brother.

They entered the taxicab and were driven almost in silence to the professor's home—a large, rambling old house, situated in somewhat extensive but ill-kept grounds on the outskirts of New York. The Englishman glanced around him, as they passed up the drive, with an expression of disapproval.

"A more untidy looking place than yours, Edgar, I never saw," he declared. "Your grounds have become a jungle. Don't you keep any gardeners?"

"I keep other things," he said serenely. "There is something in my garden which would terrify your nice Scotch gardeners into fits if they found their way here to do a little tidying up. Come into the library and I'll give you one of my choice cigars. Here's Craig waiting to let us in. Any news, Craig?"

He threw open the door of an anteroom behind his office. The apartment was unfurnished except for one or two chairs. In the middle of the uncarpeted floor was a long wooden box from which the lid had just been pried.

"Yesterday, as you know from my note," the curator proceeded, "I was away. I gave orders that your case should be placed here that I myself should enjoy the distinction of opening it. An hour ago I commenced the task. That is what I found."

The professor gazed blankly at the empty box.

"Nothing left except the smell," a voice from the open doorway remarked.

They glanced around. Quest was standing there, and behind him Lenora. The professor welcomed them eagerly.

"This is Mr. Quest, the great criminologist," he explained to the curator.

Quest strolled thoughtfully around the room, glancing out of each of the windows in turn. He kept close to the wall, and when he had finished he drew out a magnifying glass from his pocket and made a brief examination of the box. Then he asked a few questions of the curator, pointed out one of the windows to Lenora and whispered a few directions to her. She at once produced what seemed to be a foot rule from the bag which she was carrying, and hurried into the garden.

"A little invention of my own for measuring footprints," Quest explained. "Not much use here, I am afraid."

Quest stood over the box for a moment or two and looked once more out of the window. Presently Lenora returned. She carried in her hand a small object, which she brought silently to Quest. He glanced at it in perplexity. The professor peered over his shoulder.

"It is the little finger!" he cried—"the little finger of my ape!"

Quest held it away from him critically.

"From which hand?" he asked.

abroad. By all means, Mrs. Rheinholdt!"

"We shall have to go quite to the back of the house," she explained, as she led him along the darkened passages.

The professor smiled acquiescently. His eyes rested for a moment upon her necklace.

"You must really permit me, Mrs. Rheinholdt," he exclaimed, "to admire your wonderful stones. I am a judge of diamonds, and those three or four in the center are, I should judge, unique."

She held them out to him. The professor laid the end of the necklace gently in the palm of his hand and examined them through a horn-rimmed eyeglass.

"They are wonderful," he murmured, "wonderful! Why—"

He turned away a little abruptly. They had reached the back of the house and a door from outside had just been opened. A man had crossed the threshold with a coat over his arm and was standing now looking at them.

"How extraordinary!" the professor remarked. "Is that you, Craig?"

"Yes, sir," he replied. "There is a rainstorm, so I ventured to bring your mackintosh."

"Very thoughtful," the professor murmured approvingly. "I have a weakness," he went on, turning to his hostess, "for always walking home after an evening like this. In the daytime I am content to ride. At night I have the fancy always to walk."

"We don't walk half enough," Mrs. Rheinholdt sighed, glancing down at her somewhat portly figure. "Dixon," she added, turning to the footman who had admitted Craig, "take Professor Ashleigh's servant into the kitchen and see that he has something before he leaves for home. Now, professor, if you will come this way."

They reached a little room in the far corner of the house. Mrs. Rheinholdt apologized as she switched on the electric lights.

"It is a queer little place to bring you to," she said, "but my husband used to spend many hours here, and he would never allow anything to be moved. You see, the specimens are in these cases."

The professor nodded. His general attitude toward the forthcoming exhibition was merely one of politeness. As the first case opened, however, his manner completely changed. Without taking the slightest further notice of his hostess, he adjusted a pair of horn-rimmed spectacles and commenced to mumble eagerly to himself. Mrs. Rheinholdt, who did not understand a word, strolled around the apartment, yawned and finally interrupted a little stream of eulogies, not a word of which she understood, concerning a green beetle with yellow spots.

"I am so glad you are interested, professor," she said. "If you don't mind, I will rejoin my guests. You will find a shorter way back if you keep along the passage straight ahead and come through the conservatory."

"Certainly! With pleasure!" the professor agreed, without glancing up.

Mrs. Rheinholdt's reception, notwithstanding the temporary absence of its presiding spirit, was without doubt an unqualified success. In one of the distant rooms the younger people were dancing. Philip Rheinholdt, with a pretty young debutante upon his arm, came out from the dancing room and looked around amongst the little knots of people.

"Stolen!" Mrs. Rheinholdt Shrieked.

An affair so unusual as this might attract him. You will excuse me."

The professor met the great criminologist and his assistant in the hall upon their arrival. He took the former at once by the arm.

"Mr. Quest," he began, "in a sense I must apologize for my peremptory message. I am well aware that an ordinary jewel robbery does not interest you, but in this case the circumstances are extraordinary. I ventured therefore, to summon your aid."

Sanford Quest nodded shortly.

"As a rule," he said, "I do not care to take up one affair until I have a clean slate. There's your skeleton still bothering me, professor. However, where's the lady who was robbed?"

"I will take you to her," the professor replied.

Mrs. Rheinholdt's story, by frequent repetition, had become a little more coherent, a trifle more circumstantial the perfection of simplicity and utterly incomprehensible. Quest listened to it without remark and finally made his way to the conservatory. He requested Mrs. Rheinholdt to walk with him through the door by which she had entered and stop at the precise spot where the assault had been made upon her. There were one or two plants knocked down from the tiers on the right-hand side, and some disturbance in the mold where some large palms were growing. Quest and Lenora together made a close investigation of the spot. Afterwards, Quest walked several times to each of the doors leading into the gardens.

"There are four entrances altogether," he remarked, as he lit a cigar and glanced around the place. "Two lead into the gardens—one is locked and the other isn't—one connects with the back of the house—the one through which you came, Mrs. Rheinholdt, and the other leads into your reception room, into which you passed after the assault. I shall now be glad if you will permit me to examine the gardens outside for a few minutes, alone with my assistant, if you please."

For almost a quarter of an hour Quest and Lenora disappeared. They all looked eagerly at the criminologist on his return.

"It seems to me," he remarked, "that from the back part of the house the quickest way to reach Mayton avenue would be through this conservatory and out of that door. This is a

"I wonder where mother is?" he remarked. "She told me—"

The young man broke off in the middle of his sentence. He, too, like many others in the room, felt a sudden thrill almost of horror at the sound which rang without warning upon their ears—a woman's cry, a cry of fear and horror. Mrs. Rheinholdt, her hands clasping her neck, her splendid composure a thing of the past, a panic-stricken, terrified woman, stumbled into the room. She seemed on the point of collapse. Somehow or other, they got her into an easy chair.

"My jewels!" she cried. "My diamonds!"

"What do you mean, mother?" Philip Rheinholdt asked quickly. "Have you lost them?"

"Stolen!" Mrs. Rheinholdt shrieked. "Stolen there in the conservatory!"

They gazed at her open-mouthed, incredulous. Then a still, quiet voice from the outside of the little circle intervened.

"Instruct your servants, Mr. Rheinholdt, to lock and bar all the doors of the house," the professor suggested. "No one must leave it until we have heard your mother's story."

"I had just taken the professor into the little room my husband used to call the museum," Mrs. Rheinholdt explained, her voice still shaking with agitation. "I left him there to examine some specimens of beetles. I thought that I would come back through the conservatory, which is the quickest way. I was about half way across it when suddenly I heard the switch go behind me and all the electric lights were turned out. I couldn't imagine what had happened. While I hesitated I saw—"

She broke down again. There was no doubt about the genuineness of her terror.

"I saw a pair of hands—just hands—no arms—nothing but hands—come out of the darkness! They gripped me by the throat, I suppose it was just for a second. I think—I lost consciousness for a moment, although I was still standing up. The next thing I remember is that I found myself shrieking and running here—and the jewels are gone!"

"You saw no one?" her son asked incredulously. "You heard nothing?"

"I heard no footsteps, I saw no one," Mrs. Rheinholdt repeated. The professor turned away.

"If you will allow me," he begged. "I am going to telephone to my friend, Mr. Sanford Quest, the criminologist.

path leading from just outside straight to a gate in the wall. Does anyone that you know of use this means of exit?"

Mrs. Rheinholdt shook her head. "The servants might occasionally," she remarked doubtfully, "but not on nights when I am receiving."

The butler stepped forward. He was looking a little grave.

"I ought, perhaps, to inform you, madam, and Mr. Quest," he said, "that I did, only a short time ago, suggest to the professor's servant—the man who brought your mackintosh, sir," he added, turning to the professor—"that he could, if he chose, make use of this means of leaving the house. Mr. Craig is a personal friend of mine, and a member of a very select little club we have for social purposes."

"Did he follow your suggestion?" Sanford Quest asked.

"Of that I am not aware, sir," the butler replied. "I left Mr. Craig with some refreshment, expecting that he would remain until my return, but a few minutes later I discovered that he had left. I will inquire in the kitchen if anything is known as to his movements."

He hurried off. Quest turned to the professor.

"Has he been with you long, this man Craig, professor?" he asked.

The professor's smile was illuminating, his manner simple but convincing. "Craig," he asserted, "is the best servant, the most honest mortal who ever breathed. He would go any distance out of his way to avoid harming a fly. I cannot even trust him to procure for me the simplest specimens of insect life. Apart from this, he is a man of some property, which he has no idea what to do with. He is, I think I may say, too devoted to me to dream of ever leaving my service."

"You think it would be out of the question, then," Quest asked, "to associate him with the crime?"

The professor's confidence was sublime.

"I could more readily associate you, myself or young Mr. Rheinholdt here with the affair," he declared.

His words carried weight. The little breath of suspicion against the professor's servant faded away. In a moment or two the butler returned.

"It appears, madam," he announced, "that Mr. Craig left when there was only one person in the kitchen. He said good-night and closed the door behind him. It is impossible to say, therefore, by which exit he left the

Then he recognized the uniform and hesitated. The man took him by the arm and led him in. There were the best part of a hundred people taking their places after the singing of the hymn. A girl was standing up before them on a platform. She was commencing to speak, but suddenly broke off. She held out her arms to where the professor's confidential servant stood hesitating.

"Come and tell us your sins," she called out. "Come and have them forgiven. Come and start a new life in a new world. There is no one here who thinks of the past. Come and seek forgiveness."

For a moment the wife from the rain-swept world hesitated. The light of an infinite desire flashed in his eyes. Then he dropped his head. These things might be for others. For him there was no hope. He shook his head to the girl, but sank into the nearest seat and on to his knees.

"Confess Your Sins."

"He repents!" the girl called out. "Some day he will come! Brothers and sisters, we will pray for him!"

The rain dashed against the windows. The only other sound from outside was the clanging of the street cars. The girl's voice, frenzied, exhorting, almost hysterical, pealed out to the roof. At every pause the little gathering of men and women groaned in sympathy. The man's frame was shaken with sobs.

GUNPOWDER.

Some In Which the Perforated Grains Are Three Inches Long.

The bigger the gun the bigger the grain of powder. For the rifles the men carry the grains are half as big as a pinhead. For the largest guns they are three inches long and three-quarters of an inch thick. Every grain is perforated lengthwise. Small grains have a single hole, while the largest sizes have seven.

These holes regulate in a wonderful way the rapidity with which the powder will burn. If you light a scrap of paper all round the edge it will burn toward the center and the burning surface will steadily decrease. If, however, you made a hole in the center of the paper and start the conflagration there the flame will steadily grow, and the most rapid burning will take place just before the fire has reached the outer edge. This is the exact principle which governs the arrangement of the perforations in big gunpowder. The burning starts along the surface exposed by the perforations and spreads always faster as the hole is enlarged, burning fastest at the instant it is consumed.

"Most unlikely, I should say," the professor murmured. "Craig is a very shy man. He is at all times at your disposal. Mr. Quest, if you should desire to question him."

Quest nodded absently.

"My assistant and I," he announced, "would be glad to make a further examination of the conservatory, if you will kindly leave us alone."

They obeyed without demur. Quest took a seat and smoked calmly, with his eyes fixed upon the roof. Lenora went back to her examination of the overturned plants, the mold and the whole ground within the immediate environs of the assault. She abandoned the search at last, however, and came back to Quest's side. He threw away his cigar and rose.

"Nothing there?" he asked laconically.

"Not a thing," Lenora admitted.

Quest led the way toward the door.

"Lenora," he decided, "we're up against something big. There's a new hand at work somewhere."

"No theories yet, Mr. Quest?" she asked, smiling.

"Not the ghost of one," he admitted gloomily.

Along the rain-swept causeway of Mayton avenue, keeping close to the shelter of the house, his mackintosh turned up to his ears, his hands buried in his pockets, a man walked swiftly along. At every block he hesitated and looked around him. His manner was cautious, almost furtive. Once the glare of an electric light fell upon his face, a face pallid with fear, almost hopeless with despair. He walked quickly, yet he seemed to have no idea as to direction. Suddenly he paused. He was passing a great building, brilliantly lit. For a moment he thought that it was some place of entertainment. The thought of entering seemed to occur to him. Then he felt a firm touch upon his arm, a man in uniform spoke to him.

"Step inside, brother," he invited earnestly, almost eagerly, notwithstanding his monotonous nasal twang. "Step inside and find peace. Step inside and the Lord will help you. Throw your burden away on the threshold."

The man's first impulse at being addressed had seemed to be one of terror.

FREE FALLING.

Just Collapse, Drop Limply and You May Escape Serious Injury.

It was stated in a description of a recent aeroplane mishap that the aviator had time to clamber to the upper struts of his machine and that when the crash came he was practically unhurt, the landing wheels and lower part of the machine receiving and absorbing the shock.

Flying men, too, in the early days of aviation frequently leaped from falling machines and escaped with minor injuries. There is a knack in leaping and an art in falling, and athletes and aviators know both. It is to "fall free" and to offer no resistance or as little as possible.

It is not Providence that specially guards drunken men and little children when they topple. They collapse, and as the muscles and sinews are not drawn taut and no resistance offered, but little damage and frequently none results. The bone of a limp arm would need some force to be applied before it broke. A "resisting" arm would snap almost at once. In a fall all attempts to recover one's balance, if unsuccessful, mean greater damage. Let yourself collapse—fall limply—and you may escape serious injuries. It is the strain and wrench on muscles and sinews which make the bones snap.

Fall anyhow. Don't try to save yourself—and you will.—London Answers.

It is not intended that the charge in big guns shall exhaust its force instantly, says William Atherton Dupuy, writing on "Powder For the World's Guns." The beginning of the explosion starts the projectile on its way. The explosion continues, and as the projectile gains speed the force behind it continues to push. The powder is burning fastest and pushing hardest at the instant the projectile reaches the mouth of the gun. At that instant also it burns out and exhausts itself. Its work is done.—Pearson's Weekly.

A FRIEND IN NEED.

The Pleasure That Came With a Little Act of Kindness.

"I am one of your new neighbors, Mrs. Estabrooks," said a cheerful voice at our door in the very middle of our first attempt at moving. "No, I can't come in. I just brought you a bit of lunch, knowing you would be too busy to fix any. Please call on me—just next door—if I can be of any help. Goodby!"

My husband and I glanced at that tray with its two bowls of hot soup and steaming little pot of coffee and then at each other in dumb surprise.

We had just reached that dreadful state in moving when nothing is in place and the things wanted first are underneath the things wanted last—that awful moment when a sense of helplessness, weakness and homesickness combined swoops down upon you.

We had not realized that we were hungry and physically exhausted, but after sitting down at an improvised table and sampling that delicious soup and drinking the stimulating coffee we suddenly knew what had been the matter with us. Courage returned.

"Blessings on our neighbor!" cried Ben.

"Yes," I answered. "She's the jolliest caller I ever received. She has taught me how to introduce yourself to new neighbors and win their everlasting gratitude. Whatever happens in this neighborhood I'll stand by Mrs. Estabrooks—see if I don't!"—Woman's Home Companion.

Public Penance.

A quaint old law for the punishment of petty offenders exists to this day in Middleburg, the Netherlands, and anything resembling it is not known to exist elsewhere. Owing to dampness weeds quickly spring up in the streets between the paving stones, and here, under the eye of a none too severe guard, the offenders are put to work with a large trowel shaped knife clearing away the upspringing blades of green. Each is provided with a wooden stool; hence it may be imagined that they are not hard driven. Here men and women alike who have been convicted work in this manner.

NAPANEE HOTELMAN SOLD TO SOLDIERS

Mr. W. S. Dingman, Vice-Chairman of the Ontario License Board, stated on Tuesday that the board was inclined to stand behind hotelkeepers who made agreements and kept them regarding the non-supply of liquor to soldiers. This pronouncement arose in connection with the complaint of licensees in Napanee that Mr. McVicker, licensee of the Paisley Hotel, failed to keep an agreement entered into with them not to sell to soldiers.

NO LIQUOR FOR SOLDIERS.

Besides Mr. McVicker, were present James Fitzpatrick, shop licensee, who was secretary of the Napanee Association of License-holders, and W. S. Exley, License Inspector, for the district. Through Mr. Fitzpatrick it was established that on August 6 all the license-holders in Napanee on their own initiative agreed unanimously to a resolution that no liquor was to be served to soldiers in any licensed premises in Napanee, and this was to be duly bulletined. Mr. McVicker admitted having been a party to the resolution. On August 16 a large number of soldiers stopped over night in Napanee on a route March, several of these being quartered at the Paisley House. License Inspector Exley testified that he went into the Paisley House bar about 9 a.m. and found 40 or 50 men in the bar, mostly soldiers, drinking and being served from the bar. He drew Mr. McVicker's attention to what was going on, but the latter made no attempt to stop it. Twice afterwards Mr. Exley visited the bar, between 10 and 11 p.m., and found the same condition of things, though with fewer soldiers, and some of them plainly under the influence of liquor. There was also drunkenness on the streets, and at least five soldiers were placed in the town lockup over night. Mr. Exley visited the other hotel bars, but could find no evidence that any but the Paisley House had broken its agreement. He also found that the Paisley House had two additional bar-tenders engaged for the evening, who relieved one another, two being on duty in the bar continuously up to 11 p.m.

Mr. McVicker's defence was that he had instructed his bartenders not to supply any liquor to soldiers, and none was supplied to them with his knowledge. During the evening his bartender had told him that "someone" had said it would be all right to sell to the soldiers, but McVicker gave him no permission to do so. Who the "someone" was McVicker did not learn. He offered some further theory that civilians had been handing liquor around to men in his barroom. He did not deny the statements of Inspector Exley. It was also admitted that the office part of the hotel, at which Mr. McVicker busied himself that evening, was virtually part of the bar, and the proprietor should have been able to observe all that was going on.

VICE-CHAIRMAN DINGMAN'S COMMENT.

Vice-Chairman Dingman, who presided, asked McVicker if he expected his statement to be believed that no liquor was served to soldiers to his knowledge, and intimated that no intelligent man could accept such a plea as credible. He recalled what the board had done in the case of a hotel keeper at Trenton, who had come under the board's condemnation as an unfit person to keep hotel, and stated that the board would have to consider whether Mr. McVicker came also under the same designation. The other licensees in Napanee were evidently entitled to credit for standing by their word, and men whose word could not be trusted were not wanted in the

PRESENTED WITH AN ADDRESS

At a special meeting of the council last week the council granted Chief Graham his request to be allowed to resign and at the same time presented the retiring Chief with an address. All the members of the council spoke in high terms of the services the chief has rendered the town during his ten years term of office. The council also granted Mr. Graham three months pay. Following is the address:

Napanee, Sept. 3rd, 1915

James J. Graham, Esq.,

Chief Constable,
Napanee, Ont.

Dear Chief:—We, the Mayor, Reeve and members of the Council of the Town of Napanee, regret that you are severing your official connection with our Municipal Corporation. You have served the Municipality as our Chief Constable for a period of upwards of ten years and have worked early and late in the discharge of your official duties. We know full well the arduous nature of your work and the difficulty there must always be in maintaining due order and decorum in the town and enforcing a proper compliance with the many by-laws in force governing the actions of our citizens. In the discharge of the many duties imposed upon you, we believe you have exercised strength and decision where it was demanded and have used moderation and tactful discretion when the particular occasion required it. Added to this you have been uniformly courteous and polite with all whom you have come in contact.

The decision you have taken to volunteer your services with our overseas forces, we heartily commend and our daily wish is that many more of our able bodied men would fall in line and offer their services in our country's cause and in the cause of liberty.

In closing we again express our regret in losing you as our competent and faithful officer and also as a public spirited, generous and kindly citizen.

We believe the call of our king and country will prove you valorous and chivalrous and we trust, when the greatest of all wars is over, you will return to your native land and to us and we will acclaim you as you approach "Hail to our chief who in triumph advances."

W. T. GIBBARD, Mayor, S. CASE DENISON, Reeve, W. T. WALLER, F. J. DICKINSON, MARK P. GRAHAM, A. WISEMAN, GEO. T. WALTER JOHN N. OSBORNE.

Following is the address presented to Chief Graham on coming to Napanee ten years ago:

James J. Graham, Esq.,
Kingston, Ont.

Dear Sir:—Your friends upon the Kingston police force cannot allow you to depart from the city and discontinue your relations with them and not give some tangible expression of their regard.

For seven years you have been member of what we may designate our peace commission, and in all that time you have carried yourself in the most exemplary manner, discharging your varied duties faithfully and successfully, and at the same time so agreeably as to command the respect of all.

The office which you have accepted in Napanee will bring to you new responsibilities, but we know that you will do your best, that you will succeed, and that with experience you will add to your qualifications for every duty and service developing in you.

IRON IN WATER.

It Takes Only the Least Little Bit to Make Itself Felt.

Half a part per million of iron in water is detectable by taste, and more than four or five parts makes water unpalatable. In some mineral springs iron is the constituent which imparts a medicinal value to the water, but ordinarily it is undesirable. More than 25 parts per million in water used for laundering makes a stain on the clothes. Iron must be removed from water from which ice is made of a cloudy, discolored product will result. An iron content of over two or three parts per million in water used in the manufacture of paper will stain the paper.

Iron is harmful in water used for steaming, for it is in equilibrium with acids which inside the boiler become disassociated, with the result that the free acids corrode the boiler plates, but the amount of iron carried in solution by most waters is so small that the damage it does to steam boilers generally amounts to little.

Waters having a high iron content have in some places, where they have been used as city supplies, caused an immense amount of trouble and expense, for they favor the growth of creosotrix to such a degree that the water pipes become clogged with the iron sheaths of that organism. The removal of iron from water is sometimes easy and sometimes very difficult.—United States Geological Survey.

Quits.

Little Maudie would tell "whoppers." One day her aunt thought she ought to be cured of this habit, so she spoke seriously to the little maid, who promised to mend her ways.

To point the moral auntie told the tale of the shepherd boy who was at ways calling "Wolf!" until no one could believe him. Then one day the wolf really came and ate up all the sheep.

"All the sheep?" interrupted Maudie.

"Yes, every one of them," replied auntie decidedly.

"Every single one?"

Auntie nodded.

"Well," said Maudie slowly, "I don't believe you, and you don't believe me so there!"—London Answers

Mosquitoes Common to All Lands. Every climate is the mosquito's choice. In the remote tropics the explorer who disturbs for the first time with the prow of his adventuring canoe the surface of a winding river finds a cloud of microscopic spearsmen waiting his arrival. In the great north woods the mosquitoes drive the deer into deep water, and the growl of their baffled buzzing about the bar of the sleeping woodsman is almost terrifying. The prospector, toiling under his pack in icebound Alaska, knows no respite from their stings.

Vice-Chairman Dingman, who presided, asked McVicker if he expected his statement to be believed that no liquor was served to soldiers to his knowledge, and intimated that no intelligent man could accept such a plea as credible. He recalled what the board had done in the case of a hotel-keeper at Trenton, who had come under the board's condemnation as an unfit person to keep hotel, and stated that the board would have to consider whether Mr. McVicker came also under the same designation. The other licensees in Napanee were evidently entitled to credit for standing by their word, and men whose word could not be trusted were not wanted in the hotel business. Formal decision was reserved, and will be given out at an early date.

This is the first case of the kind which has come before the Commission.

ERINSVILLE.

A pretty ceremony took place in the Church of the Assumption, Erinsville, when Miss Marguerite Evans and Vincent Donoghue were joined in matrimony. Rev. Father Carey officiated. The bride looked charming in a wedding gown of white charmeuse and Brussels lace. She wore a large picture hat of white satin, with ostrich plume, and carried a bouquet of white roses and lilies-of-the-valley. Her only ornament was a gold medal, a gift of the Notre Dame Convent, of which the bride is a recent graduate. The bridesmaid, Miss Alvina Flynn, cousin of the bride, wore pale blue nixon with black velvet hat, and carried a bouquet of white carnations. The groom was supported by his brother, Leo Donoghue. The wedding march was ably rendered by Miss Marion Murphy....

His Plan.

"Well, yes," confessed the landlord of the Periwinkle tavern, "it is an idea of my own painting a purple stripe all around the hotel at the top of the first story. You see, there wouldn't otherwise be anything to distinguish this particular inn from thousands of others. As it is, a good many people drop in to point out to me that such a decoration is not in good taste or to urge some other color or something that a-way. And they usually remain long enough to spend a dollar or two before I am thoroughly convinced.

"Persons with literary talent and occasionally a real writer come along and suspect me of being a character and board here while studying me. As a matter of fact, a drummer gave me a can of purple paint out of his samples, and I didn't know what else to do with it."

Never Had 'Em.

Old Dick was an old plantation dakey. He was rarely if ever sick, and he always claimed that it was the way he had lived. One day as he was walking down the street a local merchant, taking advantage of his ignorance, accosted him thus:

"Dick, one of your best friends has just told me that you have ancestors of the worst sort."

"Now, look heah, Cap'n Gawg, I doan want to hurt nobody, but I jes' want to know who dat man was wot tol' you, and I sho will go after him, 'cause he done gone and 'sult me. Me got ancestors? Why, cap'n, that's as big a lie as was eber told. I neber had nothin' in my life but the mumps and colic."—National Monthly.

Hotelman Broke Faith With Fellow-licensees.

The Ontario License Commission apparently appreciates thoughtful action on the part of license holders to improve their business. A peculiar case will come before the Commission this week in which the board will investigate charges that a Napanee hotel man broke an agreement not to sell liquor to soldiers with other hotel men in town. The hotel men of Napanee signed an agreement "that no soldier be served on licensed premises in the town of Napanee and that a notice to this effect be posted up in a conspicuous place in each licensed premises." It is alleged that one hotel man served soldiers. The board wants to encourage such action by hotelkeepers as the agreement called for, and will find out why the hotel keeper did different.

SUBSTITUTION.

Substitution is the mortal enemy of the "square deal."

In the long run it profits no one.

When you ask for a brand by name, don't take something "just as good."

Go to the dealer who plays fair.

The dealer who trades unfairly on a manufacturer's reputation is not the kind of a dealer you want to give your confidence to, or your money.

The Canadian Government Offers Suggestions for Fruit Preserving.

In an advice circulated throughout Canada, the Fruit Branch Dept. at Ottawa suggests as being best for preserving purposes, certain brands of peaches: St. Johns, Elbertas, Crawfords and Smocks, and for plums, Bradshaws, Gages, Lombards, Reine Claude.

The advice is timely and to it may be added that many of the most successful makers of preserves have for years insisted on securing from their grocers the St. Lawrence Extra Granulated Sugar (Pure Cane).

It is well known that the slightest organic impurity in sugar will start fermentation in the jam, and St. Lawrence Sugar which tests over 99% pure has never failed the housewife. Grocers everywhere can fill orders for this sugar. The best way to buy it is in the original refinery sealed packages 2 or 5 lbs. cartons, 10, 20, 25, and 100 lb. bags.

ROUMANIA'S CAPITAL.

Bukharest is a Great Artistic and Educational Center.

Describing Bukharest, the capital of Roumania, a statement issued by the National Geographic society says:

"The Roumanians have spared no effort or thought toward making Bukharest, their capital city, a real capital and not just one of the larger Balkan towns, cut to the severe design of the modern commercial city that is found throughout the west. The whole history of the Roumanians since the casting off of the Turkish yoke has been one of conservative progress leavened with enterprise, of thrift lightened by keen appreciation of the embellishments and pleasures of life. And in Bukharest one finds more artistic, literary and scientific life than in any other part of the peninsula.

"Bukharest is an attractive city of 300,000. It is laid out with many broad boulevards and avenues, as becomes a capital, and has, as Paris, Berlin and Washington, famous drives and parks within its area, an 'avenue of parades' and zoological and botanical gardens. The city is built in a hollow between the hills upon both sides of the Dambovitza river, which is crossed by twelve ornate bridges. There are some truly magnificent buildings upon its broad thoroughfares, among the most prominent of which are the royal palace, the university, the national theater and the palace of justice. Bukharest has some squalid sections, with narrow, crooked streets, but these are reminiscences of the Turkish regime and are fast disappearing. While Bukharest does a considerable commercial business, it is of no importance industrially.

"Bukharest, like our own capital, has been developed primarily as a capital. The Roumanians have chosen Paris and Vienna as their models and have produced a judicious blending of the two upon the much smaller Balkan scale. Bukharest has plenty of good music, and its people, who gather in the concert halls or enjoy the free military concerts in the evening along some promenade, are appreciative and critical listeners. The national theater brings varied offerings, and that the best. Then the entertainments of the little capital are discreet imitations of social Paris, with a touch of mild Viennese friendliness. Furthermore, Bukharest, as also becomes a European center, is a most educational center.

HEROIC VETERANS

Napoleon's Famous Fighters, the Imperial Guard.

LIVED UP TO THEIR MOTTO.

Even at Waterloo the Survivors of the Old Guard Fought Their Way on Their Retreat and None Surrendered. Their Shameful and Pathetic End.

Probably no household troops or bodyguards in the world ever achieved the reputation of Napoleon's Imperial guard, and they had their origin in a manner that shows that imperial guards, like inventions, generally are often mothered by necessity.

It was during his Milan campaign, in the days of the republic, while Napoleon was still General Bonaparte, that the Austrians nearly captured the Little Corporal. If they had succeeded probably the whole history of Europe would have been different and Waterloo would be still waiting for a reputation.

He was passing along the bank of a river with a small escort lent from the divisions of Augereau and Massena. An Austrian corps was hastening up the banks of the same stream to join Beaulieu. After General Bonaparte had ridden some distance in company with Augereau he then returned to Valeggio, where he stopped. He had been suffering from headache and believed that a foot bath would effect a cure.

So during his stop he pulled off his boots and sought to bathe his feet at a house in the village. While he was thus engaged the Austrians appeared. They came so rapidly that there was scarcely time to sound an alarm. However, the alarm was sounded, the gates of the carriage way closed, and the post began to make a defense.

Pulling one boot on one leg and fearing to spend the time to boot the other, Bonaparte rushed out through a back way and thus made his escape on his horse. He rushed as hard as his horse would carry him to Messina, and, although his troops were at mess, they were quickly gathered and started off after the Austrians, who, when they were met, were forced to flee.

But the experience taught Napoleon a lesson. He found that it was perfectly possible for a commanding officer to be taken prisoner with comparative ease, and he soon found a way to make this more difficult.

He organized a command, at first called guides, whose principal duty was to protect the commanding officer. By degrees this body was increased, and under the consulate it was known as the Garde Consulaire, receiving that title in 1799. At that time it consisted of 9775 men and was a mere body of household troops, although naturally with a man like Napoleon it was a combatant force and not for ornamental purposes.

In 1804, with the creation of the empire, this body became the Imperial guard. It grew in size and importance, and in 1809 it was divided into the Vieille garde and the Jeune garde. It was a place of honor. To be admitted the soldier must have served in three campaigns. Consequently it was known as the elite of the imperial troops. Every man was a veteran. It could be

ALLIED ARMIES ABOUT READY TO TURN ON ENEMY

LONDON, Sept. 7, 10 p.m.—news that Emperor Nicholas had placed himself at the head of his army which he announced in a telegram Raymond Poincare, President France, and the visit paid by G. Joffre to the Italian army, foreshadow, it is believed in military circles here, stirring events on both eastern and western fronts in which the armies of all the allies will operate.

It is declared that the Russians ready are nearly, if not quite, holding their own against the Austrians and Germans, whose advance at points has been brought to a stand and in places are carrying on a counter offensive.

RIGA STILL HELD.

Riga remains the danger point, the fact that the Russians continue to occupy the town after the Germans have advanced to the Dvina northeast of Riga, leads the military writers to the conclusion that Russians feel pretty sure of their ability to defend the river and time to push sufficiently far west to relieve the pressure on their front on the shores of the Gulf of Riga.

HELD UP OVER WEEK.

Westward of Dvinsk and Vilna Russian offensive has now held up Germans for more than a week, to the military observers those towns seem fairly safe unless the invaders are able to bring up reinforcements. East and south of Grodno the Russians have taken up new positions across the Nisthar and its numerous tributaries and are protecting the net work of railways which run eastward northward to the interior of the country.

BATTLE IN MARSHES.

To the southeast again, among forests and swamps to the north edge of the Pripiet marshes, a battle is in progress between the army of Prince Leopold of Bavaria and the troops of the Russian command. The latter having at last elected to make a stand. Amid the marches the German Field Marshal Mackensen is working hard for a decisive result. He reports that he has taken two Russian positions.

Still another battle is being fought for the triangle of fortifications to the south, of which Rovno and Brest remain in the hands of the Russians.

The Austrians and Russians are fighting each other across the San River in Galicia, where the fighting is continuous. The stands which the Russians are making suggest their supply of munitions is at a Petrograd correspondent says ammunition shortage of the Russians has been corrected and that the production is slow it is increasing and growing in activity and meeting.

THIRTEEN DAYS BOMBARDMENT.

For the thirteenth successive the allies have bombarded German positions in the west, only by their artillery activity by occasional air raids, sapping and mining operations and bomb throwing.

Simultaneous activity is noticed on part of the Austro-German army on the northern frontier of Serbia, the Teutons are strengthening positions on the rivers Save and Danube, presumably preparatory

HIS WIFE'S TRIUMPH.

A Record That Used to Inspire Green, the Famous Historian.

It has been the fate of many men of letters to have ill health bearing them down as they struggle on toward literary achievements. Thus beset in recent times were Stevenson, Richard Jeffries and J. R. Green. Each of these, it happened, had a high hearted wife to keep him up, even to help him with the actual labor of writing. "The Life and Letters of J. R. Green" show forth a great and sweet man. They show, too, a wife whose sympathy and fortitude helped to make his accomplishment possible.

In copying the vast amount of manuscript of her husband's books Mrs. Green contracted writer's cramp and was forced to stop using her right hand. This looked like a final obstacle in the way of the invalid, who did much of his thinking in bed and could not write himself. But Mrs. Green set to work at once learning to write with her left hand.

One of her first practice pages, which she was about to destroy with the rest, her husband took quietly and put in his pocket. Years afterward when ill health seemed unbearable and in discouragement he felt that he could not work he used to take out that piece of paper, a living record of his wife's triumph over difficulty. When he saw the painful, patient strokes by which Mrs. Green had learned to write with her left hand he could work on with something near to inspiration.

Keeping Friends.

It is one thing to make friends, but quite another to keep them. Remember that friendship will not thrive on discourtesy or neglect. Little courtesies and attentions to those with whom we are most intimate help to smooth and sweeten life.—Home Chat

Making Matches.

The manufacture of matches is a complicated and elaborate process, in which are used a succession of ingenious machines and devices which must work at all times with the utmost precision and delicacy. It is now possible to turn out from a single dipping machine about 600,000 square matches an hour. A green log is made into matches and packed for shipment in less than two hours.

household troops, although naturally with a man like Napoleon it was a combatant force and not for ornamental purposes.

In 1804, with the creation of the empire, this body became the Imperial guard. It grew in size and importance, and in 1809 it was divided into the Vieille garde and the Jeune garde. It was a place of honor. To be admitted the soldier must have served in three campaigns. Consequently it was known as the elite of the imperial troops. Every man was a veteran. It could be depended upon to do its utmost. In 1814, when Napoleon abdicated for the first time, the Imperial guard had been increased to 112,482 men of all branches of service.

It was owing to the fact that this army, called the imperial guard, was composed of veterans, men who had seen service and were old campaigners, that Napoleon believed them to be unconquerable. The prunt of battle always had to be borne by the imperial guard. They consequently were always fearfully cut up. Only a remnant of the guard returned from Russia, and at Waterloo their ranks were cut down until few of the old guard remained. It was their motto that the old guard never surrenders, and those who were able to walk away from the battlefield at the foot of Mont St. Jean fought their way on their retreat, and none surrendered.

After Waterloo the old guard was treated shamefully. As many as could be caught were court martialed, and the remainder were regarded as so many banditti. General Lallemand brought 200 of them to America and with them founded a colony in Texas, then not United States territory. This settlement, which was unsuccessful, was named Champ d'Asile, or Field of Refuge. The Mexican government compelled them to leave, and they next sought refuge at Galveston, but again were made to move on, and finally, after a few months, the 47 of the 200 that survived arrived in New Orleans. They came here in 1818, and it was not until 1820, when there were only a few survivors, that a sum of 80,000 francs reached the exiles.—Exchange.

A Swiss Philanthropy.

The custom still obtains in Switzerland, though not so generally as formerly, of newly married couples making a small gift of money immediately after the wedding ceremony to the school funds as a sort of thanksgiving for their education. ALLIED ARMIES ABOUT READY TO TURN ON ENEMY

LONDON, Sept. 7, 10 p.m.—The news that Emperor Nicholas had placed himself at the head of his army, which he announced in a telegram to Raymond Poincaré, President of France, and the visit paid by Gen. Sir Wilfrid's Address At The Big Patriotic Meeting Last Week

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who rose to address the immense audience at 3.25, had a great ovation, the singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" being rendered with great gusto. The veteran Liberal leader, who was suffering from an ulcerated foot and also the oppressive heat, bore up wonderfully well under the strain, though from the restlessness which prevailed at the back of the building it was sometimes difficult to catch every word. After he had proceeded for half an hour, Sir Wilfrid could not stand the stifling atmosphere and asked to be excused for a few minutes to recover. Mr. W. F. Nickle, M.P. for Kingston, held the breach for five minutes, and amid a whirlwind of cheering pleaded that, on the resumption of his address, Sir Wilfrid, whom he termed "the foremost figure of his race," receive a quiet and careful hearing. With remarkable pluck for his years under the circumstances, Sir Wilfrid was on his feet again in five minutes, and occupied a quarter of an hour with the remainder of his speech.

NECESSITY FOR FULL SACRIFICE.

The Liberal leader's speech was an emphatic expression of the "terrible necessity that is incumbent on the friends of freedom to rise up to the full measure of the sacrifices which are required in the stupendous struggle in which we are now engaged." "It has been said," remarked Sir Wilfrid "that if you are to have peace you must prepare for war." That is a statement with which I do not agree. It is true to say if you want war you must prepare for war. This is shown most conclusively by the record of the German army. It seems to me manifest that if you have conscription and forced enlistment, take the youth of the country when they reach 15 years and put them into barracks for two or three years, you will instill into them a desire for war which must bring the effect some time or other. That is specially true of the German army, where the staff teaches to the soldiers that war means glory and duty. Last year, shortly after the war began, we saw a letter in the newspapers of a man high in command of the German army stating that they were fighting France for glory and England for booty. I do not know whether that statement is true or not, but we have reason to think it is true, because it is certainly the tradition of the Prussian army."

Alluding to Germany's lust for power, Sir Wilfrid declared, with the unequivocal assent of the gathering, that this was not an ordinary war, it was a war for the domination of the world. "This is a war which to every British subject means that before we consent to this spirit of the German army we are prepared to shed our last drop of blood." (Cheers.)

MUST FIGHT OUT THIS STRUGGLE

"It is certainly a sad comment on the part of the German people," continued the speaker, "that they will surrender their whole mind to one man who in a moment can plunge Germany, Europe and the world into the tremendous horrors of war. More than thirty years ago Lord Beaconsfield came back from Berlin bringing a treaty with the which he presented as peace with honor. If treaties brought from Berlin to-day are held Britain never fought in a more noble, honorable and holy war."

This war will eventuate in either one of two things: either it will be an advance in the march of freedom, or the world's lapsing into barbarism. History has been an almost unbroken record of strife and wars, and if you analyze the cause of these you find only one cause: that there were men who wanted to rule despotically and other men who refused to withstand the tyranny.

BRITAIN AND FRANCE COMPARED.

Two sections in Europe, Britain and France, had been in the van in the cause of freedom and civilization. But their ways and methods had been different. The progress of Britain had been orderly, steady and continuous, ever moderate in expression, but inflexible in purpose. In France the people never showed the same feeling in favor of liberty as in Great Britain. They never made the difference and distinctions between the Crown and the rights of the people. But when the French people adopted the principle of responsible government, such as existed in Great Britain, they made progress, and were the admiration of the world. It was remarkable that the German people, who in all intellectual walks of life had shown wonderful aptitude, had never shown the keen desire for self-government which was characteristic of the British race.

Following is the telegram received from Sir Geo. E. Foster on Thursday last.

Westmount, Que.,

Napawee, missed train connections at Coteau. Deeply regret mishap. Please present my apologies to meeting and ask Sir Wilfrid to do double duty.

OUR OTTAWA LETTER

By the time this article appears in print Major-General Sir Sam Hughes will have reached home and the Militia Department will once more be breathing life, light and sunshine from his smile. Nobody begrudges him his title. He is as perfect a Knight as ever wore white satin breeches, and a model major-general—in fact a 1915 model.

It is true that many questions had to be laid over or only partly dealt with because the responsible minister was out of the country but now that he has returned the public may look for quick action. The matter of a disablement fund, for example, has hung fire while the Major-General was having a good time in London, but now that he is back on the spot the movement will doubtless receive a new impulse. Other matters which press, which have pressed in fact during the whole long term of Sir Sam's summer holidays, are vocational training for our partially disabled heroes, the placing of the returned veterans in jobs at least as good as they left, and perhaps the establishment of half a dozen soldiers' homes to shelter the utterly helpless. All summer the cripples, the maimed, blinded, shattered by the war, have been drifting back and some of them complain bitterly of their treatment. Canada sent them to battle proudly enough and thought much of glory and things like that but failed to provide for the wreckage. Now that the Major-General has come back well and strong after the hardships of the London season he will probably look into this question. It is as much the work of the Militia Department as the complete outfitting of the battalions which enlist for the principle that the man with the pull gets the job even if he has no plant while the man with the plant gets no job until he develops a proper pull. This naturally holds things up for it often happens that the man with the pull and the man with the plant do not synchronize, as Finance Minister White would say. When these things are called to his attention the Major-General may be expected to ask what difference who makes the soldier's coat, as long as it covers a brave heart. As a soldier himself he will understand that courage and loyalty recognize no party lines and that a man will fight as well with Grit khaki on his back as Tory.

As a gallant Knight Sir Sam will brush all these petty motives aside and insist on the soldiers having the right kind of cloths regardless of the shops they come from. The man with the seat out of his pants who has just joined the army naturally yearns for the raiment of his new calling. So does the other man whose trousers may be intact and whom glory drives. Both are entitled to the self-respect and the advertising of their loyal intentions which a uniform applies. Personally I do not believe that the uniform will affect their votes one way or the other. The uniform is skin-deep but party convictions are a good deal deeper than that.

The Major-General would be well advised to expel this fear which haunts the Militia Department and the Purchasing Commission—the fear that a Tory soldier might change his mind because his fighting clothes came from a Grit factory. There's nothing in it. The chances are he never thinks of his clothes, so long as he has 'em and they hang together. And even if the subject were called to his attention I doubt if he would pause in the heat of battle to argue out its political bearings.

Yes, Sir Sam will need to use his eyes—those sharp, glancing, Napoleon eyes, which threaten and command everybody but the Toronto Telegram. If he uses them as he ought he will soon discover that the system of granting provisional lieutenantcies to eager young Conservatives who take a short snap course at Kingston to qualify while at the same time seasoned officers are turned down for places at the front because they happen to be Liberal, is not a square deal. This system deliberately discourages the patriotic impulses of half the population. And it is not confined to lieutenantcies either. It affects all ranks. There is right now at least one Major-General who is suffering from this sort of injustice. Sir Sam once had experience at General Hutton's hands of the flouts that patient merit may be obliged to take from those in authority. He had, as we remember, to go to South Africa on his own hook and mighty grateful we are to him for settling the Boer war as soon as he did—he and Turpin. But did he learn the lesson? The lesson that you can't keep a hero down and you mustn't try.

Sir Sam is in great luck, in great luck to be Major-General and Minister of Militia for Canada in the greatest war the world has ever seen, in great luck to have a united country behind him and an Opposition kind even to his faults, but it is up to him to use his great luck generously. Providence has drawn no distinction between the courage, ability and patriotism of Liberals and Conservatives—why should the Militia Department do so?

MUST FIGHT OUT THIS STRUGGLE

"It is certainly a sad comment on the part of the German people," continued the speaker, "that they will surrender their whole mind to one man who in a moment can plunge Germany, Europe and the world into the tremendous horrors of war. More than thirty years ago Lord Beaconsfield came back from Berlin bringing a treaty with the which he presented as peace with honor. If treaties brought from Berlin to-day are held to be 'scraps of paper,' there was nothing to do for Britain but to return to Berlin with victory and honor. (Cheers.) That is the message which I have to bring to you to-day. This is what we have to do: we have to fight this war out till Germany is humbled, so that we shall have peace afterwards. For my part, I have no hard feeling against the German people, but they have allowed themselves to be degraded to the ranks of barbarians, and we must see to it that the spirit now prevailing in Germany is wiped out, and that the people are brought to what I believe is their true nature of kindness and benevolence."

NEVER DISCOURAGED!

"One year has elapsed since the war broke out," proceeded the orator of the day. "I am sorry to say the war is not so far advanced on our side as I would have hoped. We are far from victory still. But should we be disappointed or discouraged? Never! We are not discouraged at all. (Cheers.) Lord Kitchener told us that this war is to last three years, so if hostilities are to last that time the allies must be prepared for more reverses, such reverses as we have at the present time."

APPEAL TO YOUNG MEN.

"I have come here to talk to the young men. I have only one argument to make with them, and if it does not touch them nothing will. It is that only the brave deserve the fair. If there is a young man who is not touched by that, I despair of him. We do not fight for glory, for booty, but we fight so that Belgium shall be free, France recover her lost territory, Britain retain her proud position, that Germany may learn that treaties must be kept, that the right of small nations must be respected, democracy triumph, and that victory will bring mankind nearer to that goal, always to be sought, of peace and good-will toward men."

NO CAUSE TO WITHHOLD CO-OPERATION.

In the course of his speech Sir Wilfrid pointed out that this was the first time he had the privilege of appearing before them in Napanee, but the name, he said, was well known, and he would say that dear to him were men like Sir John Macdonald and Sir Richard Cartwright and other friends from that locality with whom he had acquaintance in his long career. Nobody would charge him with being overburdened with confidence in the present Administration, but when hostilities broke out he told Sir Robert Borden he would co-operate with him in his war policy. Reviewing what had taken place during the twelve months, he had no cause to change his mind. They were in a war of the most bitter kind.

THIS NO ORDINARY WAR.

Sir Wilfrid alluded to John Bright's opposition to the Crimean war, and declared that if this war had been such as the Crimean war he (the speaker) would not have hesitated to make use of the freedom which is granted to the subject, and to speak as John Bright spoke. But the present war was not an ordinary war.

by the war, have been drifting back and some of them complain bitterly of their treatment. Canada sent them to battle proudly enough and thought much of glory and things like that but failed to provide for the wreckage. Now that the Major-General has come back well and strong after the hardships of the London season he will probably look into this question. It is as much the work of the Militia Department as the complete outfitting of the battalions which enlist for the front.

Another matter which needs mending is a certain favoritism which Sir Sam will be surprised to learn still exists. He probably thought because statesmen on both sides of politics were laying aside their party differences and joining hands to recruit soldiers for King and Country that the Militia Department and the much vaunted Purchasing Committee were running their business on the same lines. Not so. If the Major-General had been in Ottawa instead of four thousand miles of blue ocean away he would that where appointments and contracts are concerned the old traditions are in force. Commissions in the army are like kisses—they go by favor. So do the contracts. The only thing to be shared with the Opposition is patriotic speeches.

Canadian soldiers are marching about, some in rags some in bags, not from choice but because the militia authorities have not supplied them with uniforms. The contracts for uniforms seem to be awarded on the luck to have a united country behind him and an Opposition kind even to his faults, but it is up to him to use his great luck generously. Providence has drawn no distinction between the courage, ability and patriotism of Liberals and Conservatives—why should the Militia Department do so?

RURAL SCHOOL FAIRS.

Mr. G. B. Curran, of the Department of Agriculture, last week attended the conference at Guelph of the District Representatives, employed by the Ontario Department of Agriculture. The meetings were held at the Ontario Agricultural College, and forty men were in attendance. The principal line of work discussed was the Rural School Fair movement. In Ontario this year 234 School Fairs are being held. Lennox and Addington county is second in Ontario in the number of School Fairs to be held, with 10.

The dates set for the School Fairs in this county are as follows:

Ernestown	Sept. 10th
Amherst Island, Stella	Sept. 17th
Camden, Centreville	Sept. 20th
Richmond, Selby	Sept. 23rd
N. Fredericksburgh	Sept. 27th
Kaladar	Oct. 5th
Newburgh	Oct. 16th

"Quick! My hat! Heaven preserve us, how it rains!" she cried in a deep, wheezy voice and—in German.

"Moth"—I began insinuatingly, but the sacred word died unfinished on my lips. The next instant I was scurrying down the platform to where I saw Britton standing.

"Have you seen them?" I shouted wildly.

"No, sir. Not a sign, sir. Ah, see!" He pointed excitedly down the platform.

"No!" I rasped out. "By no possible stretch of the imagination can that be Mrs. Titus. Come, we must ask the conductor. That woman? Good Lord, Britton, she waddles!"

The large lady and the smallish man passed us on the way to shelter, the latter holding an umbrella over her hat with one hand and lugging a heavy hamper in the other. They were both exclaiming in German. The station guard and the conductor were bowing and scraping in their wake, both carrying boxes and bundles.

No one else had descended from the train. I grabbed the conductor by the arm.

"Any one else getting off here?" I demanded in English and at once repeated it in German.

He shook himself loose, dropped the bags in the shelter of the station house, doffed his cap, to the imperious backs of his late passengers, and scuttled back to the car. A moment later the train was under way.

"Can you not see for yourself?" he shouted from the steps as he passed me by.

Once more I swooped down upon the guard. He was stuffing the large German lady into a small, lopsided carriage, the driver of which was taking off his cap and putting it on again after the manner of a mechanical toy.

"Go away," hissed the guard angrily. "This is the mayor and the mayoress. Stand aside! Can't you see?"

"When does the next train get in?" I asked for the third time. He was still bowing after the departing hack.

"Ach, Gott!" he gasped. Collecting his thoughts, he said: "There is no train until 9 o'clock in the morning. Nine, mein herr."

"Ach, Gott!" groaned I. "Are you sure?"

"Jah! You can go home now and go to bed, sir. There will be no train until 9, and I will not be on duty then. Good night."

"I dare say we'd better be starting home, sir," said Britton timidly. "Something 'as gone wrong with the plans, I fear. They did not come, sir."

"Do you think I am blind?" I roared. "Not at all, sir," he said in haste, "Heavenly!" I gasped.

"Ah, but look at the glorious sun!" he cried, waving the oil rag in all directions at once.

The sun! Upon my word, the sun was shining fiercely. I hadn't noticed it before.

"Well, I'm—dashed!" I said, with a silly grin.

"The moon will shine tonight, Mr. Schmarck"—he began insinuatingly.

"Smart, if you please!" I snapped.

"Ah," he sighed, rolling his eyes, "it is fine to be in love."

A full minute passed before I grasped the meaning of that soft answer, and then it was too late. He had gone about his business without waiting to see whether my wrath had been turned away. I had been joy riding!

The excitement in Britton's usually imperturbable countenance as he came running up to me from the telephone closet prepared me in a way for the startling news that was to come.

"Has anything serious happened?" I cried, my heart sinking a little lower.

"I had Mr. Poopendyke himself on the wire, sir. What do you think, sir?"

A premonition! "She—she has arrived!" I demanded wildly.

He nodded. "She 'as, sir. Mrs.—your mother, sir, is in your midst." The proximity of the inquisitive manager explains this extraordinary remark on the part of my valet. We both glared at the manager, and he had the delicacy to move away. "She arrived by a special train at 12 last night, sir."

I was speechless. The brilliant sunshine seemed to be turning into somber night before my eyes. Everything was going black.

"She's asleep, he says, and doesn't want to be disturbed till noon, so he says he can't say anything more just now over the telephone because he's afraid of waking 'er." (Britton drops them when excited.)

"He doesn't have to shout so loud that he can be heard on the top door," said I, still a trifle dazed.

"She 'appens to be sleeping in your bed, sir, he says."

"In my bed? Good heavens, Britton, what's to become of me?"

"Don't take it so 'ard, sir," he made haste to say. "Blatchford 'as fixed a place for you on the couch in your study, sir. It's all very snug, sir."

"But, Britton," I said in horror, "suppose that I should have come home last night. Don't you see?"

"I daresay she 'ad the door locked, sir," he said.

"By special train," I mumbled. A light broke in upon my reviving intellect. "Why, it was the train that went through at a mile a minute while we were in the coffee house. No wonder we didn't meet her!"

"I shudder to think of wot would 'ave 'appened if we had, sir," said he, meaning no doubt to placate me. "Mr. Poopendyke says the countess 'as been up all night worrying about you, sir. She has been distracted. She wanted 'im to go out and search for you at 4 o'clock this morning, but he says he assured 'er you'd turn up all right. He says Mrs.—the elderly lady, begging your pardon, sir—thought she was doing for the best when she took a special. She wanted to save us all the trouble she could. He says she was very much distressed by our failure to 'ave some one meet her with a launch when she got here last night, sir. As it was, she didn't reach the castle until nearly 1, and she looked

CHAPTER XIX.

I Meet Mrs. Titus.

WHILE we were crossing the muddy stream my secretary, his teeth chattering with cold and excitement combined, related the story of the night.

"We were just starting off for the boathouse up the river, according to plans. Max and Rudolph and I with the two boats, when the countess came down in a mackintosh and a pair of gum boots and insisted upon going along with us. She said it wasn't fair to make you do all the work and all that sort of thing. While we were arguing with her—and it was getting so late that I feared we wouldn't be in time to meet you—we heard some one shouting on the opposite side of the river. The voice sounded something like Britton's, and the countess insisted that there had been an accident and that you were hurt. Mr. Smart, and nothing would do but we must send Max and Rudolph over to see what the trouble was. It was raining cats and dogs, and I realized that it would be impossible for you to get a boatman on that side at that hour of the night—it was nearly 1—so I sent the two Schmicks across. I've never seen a night as dark as it was. The two little lanterns bobbing in the boat could hardly be seen through the torrents of rain, and it was next to impossible to see the lights on the opposite landing stage—just a dull, misty glow."

"To make the story short, Mrs. Titus and her sons were over there, with absolutely no means of crossing the river. It took two trips over to fetch the whole party across. Raining pitch forks all the time, you understand. Mrs. Titus was fuming at the mouth because you don't own a yacht or at least a launch with a canopy top or a limousine body or something of the sort.

"I didn't have much of a chance to converse with her. The countess tried to get her upstairs in the east wing but she wouldn't climb another step. I forgot to mention that the windlass was out of order and she had to climb the hill in mud six inches deep. The Schmicks carried her the last half of the distance. She insisted on sleeping hasn't been rained upon."

We were halfway up the slope when he announced nervously that all of dry clothing was in the closet off bedroom and could not be got at under any circumstance.

"But," he said, "I have laid out best frock coat and trousers for you and a complete change of linen. I am quite welcome to anything I please, Mr. Smart. I think if you take couple of rolls at the bottom of trousers they'll be presentable. I don't count may be a little long for you but—"

My loud laughter cut him short.

"It's the best I could do," he said with an aggrieved voice.

I had a secret hope that the countess would be in the courtyard to welcome me, but I was disappointed. Old Gr met me and wept over me, as if I were not already sufficiently moist. The chef came running out to say that breakfast would be ready for me when I desired it; Blatchford felt of my sleeve and told me that I was quite wet; Hawkes had two large steam toddlers waiting for us in the vestibule apparently fearing that we could not farther without the aid of a staid servant. But there was no sign of single Titus.

Later I ventured forth in Poopendyke's best suit of clothes, the one I used when he passes the plate on 8 days in faraway Yonkers. It smelt of moth balls, but it was gloriously dry, so why carp? We sneaked down the corridor past my own bedroom door and stole into the study.

Just inside the door I stopped in amazement. The countess was so asleep in my big armchair, a fork but lovely thing in a pink peign. Her rumpled brown hair nestled the angle of the chair; her head drooped listlessly at her sides; dimes lay upon the soft white cheek; her lips were parted ever so slightly and her bosom rose and fell in the swell of perfect repose.

"Poopendyke clutched me by the arm and drew me toward the door or might have stood there transfixed, heaven knows how long.

"She's asleep," he whispered.

It was the second time in two hours that some one had intimated that I was blind.

The door creaked villainously, its gaunt, ecclesiastical tails of my best rowed frock coat were on the verge of being safely outside with me when she cried out, whereupon I swiftly transposed myself and stuck my head through the half open door.

"Oh, it's you!" she cried, in a very voice. She was leaning forward in the chair, her eyes wide open and eager.

I advanced into the room. A look of doubt sprang into her face. She stared for a moment and then rather pitifully rubbed her eyes.

"Yes, it is I," said I, spreading my arms in such a way that my hair emerged from the confines of Poopendyke's sleeves. (Upon my word, I had no idea that he was so much longer than I.) "It is still I, countess, despite the shrinkage."

"The shrinkage?" she murmured slowly sliding out of the chair. She unbent her cramped leg she made a little grimace of pain, but smiled as she limped toward me, her hand extended.

"Yes, I always shrink when I get wet," I explained, resorting to fatuousness.

Then I bent over her hand and kissed it.

his thoughts, he said: "There is no train until 9 o'clock in the morning. Njue, mein herr."

"Ach, Gott!" groaned I. "Are you sure?"

"Jah! You can go home now and go to bed, sir. There will be no train until 9, and I will not be on duty then. Good night."

"I dare say we'd better be starting home, sir," said Britton timidly. "Something has gone wrong with the plans, I fear. They did not come, sir."

"Do you think I am blind?" I roared. "Not at all, sir," he said in haste, taking a step or two backward.

By the time we succeeded in starting the engine after cranking for nearly half an hour I was so consumed by wrath over the scurvy trick Mrs. Titus had played upon us that I swore she should not enter my castle if I could prevent it. Moreover, I would take fiendish delight in dumping her confounded luggage into the Danube. We then had trouble with the lamps. At last we were off, Britton at the wheel. I shall not describe that diabolical trip home. It is only necessary to say that we first lost our way and went ten or twelve kilometers in the wrong direction; then we had a blowout and no quick detachable rim. Subsequently something went wrong with the mud caked machinery, and my unfortunate valet had to lie on his back in a puddle for half an hour. Eventually we sneaked into the garage with our trembling car and quarreled manfully with the men who had to wash her.

"Good heavens, Britton!" I exclaimed suddenly.

He looked at me in astonishment. I admit that the ejaculation must have sounded weak and effeminate to him after what had gone before.

"What is it, sir?" he asked, at once resuming his status as a servant after a splendid hiatus of five hours or more in which he had enjoyed all of the by-products of equality.

"Poopendyke!" I exclaimed, aghast. "I have just thought of him. The poor devil has been waiting for us three miles up the river since midnight! What do you think of that?"

"No such luck, sir," said he grumpily. "Luck! You heartless rascal! What do you mean by that?"

"I beg pardon, sir. I mean to say he could sit in the boat-house and twiddle his thumbs at the elements, sir. Trust Mr. Poopendyke to keep out of the rain."

"In any event he is still waiting there for us, wet or dry, he and the two big Schmicks." I took a moment for thought. "We must telephone to the castle and have Hawkes send Conrad out with word to them." I looked at my watch. It was twenty minutes past 7. "I suppose no one in the castle went to bed last night. Good Lord! What a scene for a farce!"

We retraced our steps to the garage, where Britton went to the telephone. I stood in the doorway of the building staring gloomily, hollow eyed at the well, at nothing, now that I stop to think of it. The manager of the place, an amiable, jocund descendant of Lazarus, approached me.

"Quite a storm last night, Mr. Schmarck," he said, rubbing his hands on an oil rag. I gruffly agreed with him in a monosyllable. "But it is lovely today, sir. Heavenly, sir."

like a drowned rat when she got there, being hex-exposed to a beastly rain-storm. See wot I mean? She went to bed in a dreadful state, he says, but he thinks she'll be more pleasant before the day is over."

I burst into a fit of laughter. "Hurrah!" I shouted exultantly. "Well, by Jove, I don't feel half as bad as I did five minutes ago. Come, let us be off."

We started briskly down the street. My spirits were beginning to rebound. Poopendyke had said that she worried all night about me. She had been distracted! Poor little woman! Still I was glad to know that she had the grace to sit up and worry instead of going to sleep as she might have done. I was just mean enough to be happy over it.

Poopendyke met us on the town side of the river. He seemed a trifle haggard, I thought. He was not slow, on the other hand, to announce in horror-struck tones that I looked like a ghost.

"You must get those wet clothes off at once, Mr. Smart, and go to bed with a hot water bottle and ten grains of quinine. You'll be very ill if you don't. Put a lot more elbow grease into those oars, Max. Get a move on you. Do you want Mr. Smart to die of pneumonia?"

forks all the time, you understand. Mrs. Titus was foaming at the mouth because you don't own a yacht or at least a launch with a canopy top or a limousine body or something of the sort.

"I didn't have much of a chance to converse with her. The countess tried to get her upstairs in the east wing but she wouldn't climb another step. I forgot to mention that the windlass was out of order and she had to climb the hill in mud six inches deep. The Schmicks carried her the last half of the distance. She insisted on sleeping in the hall or the study—anywhere but upstairs. I assumed the responsibility of putting her in your bed, sir. It was either that or—"

I broke in sarcastically. "You couldn't have put her into your bed, I suppose."

"Not very handily, Mr. Smart," I said in an injured voice. "One of her sons occupied my bed. Of course it was all right, because I didn't intend to go to bed, as it happened. The older son went upstairs with the countess. She gave up her bed to him, and then she and I sat up all night in the study waiting for a telephone message from you. The younger son explained a good many things to us that his mother absolutely refused to discuss. She was so mad when she got here. It seems she took it into her head at the last minute to charter a special train but forgot to notify us of the switch in the plans. She traveled by the regular train from Paris to some place along the line, where she got out and waited for the special which was following along behind, straight from Paris too. A woeful waste of money. It seemed to me. Her idea was to throw a couple of plain clothes men off the track, and, by George, sir, she succeeded. They thought she was changing from a train to some place in Switzerland and went off to watch the other station. Then she sneaked aboard the special, which was chartered clear through to Vienna. See how clever she is? If they followed on the next train or telegraphed it would naturally be to Vienna. She got off at this place, and—well, we have her with us, sir, as snug as a bug in a rug."

"What is she like, Fred?" I inquired. I confess that I hung on his reply.

"I have never seen a wet hen, but I should say on a guess that she's a good bit like one. Perhaps when she's thoroughly dried out she may not be so bad, but"—he drew a long, deep breath—"but upon my word of honor she was the limit last night. Of course one couldn't expect her to be exactly gracious, with her hair plastered over her face and her hat spoiled and her clothes soaked, but there was really no excuse for some of the things she said to me. I shall overlook them for your sake and for the countess." He was painfully red in the face.

"The conditions, Fred," I said, "were scarcely conducive to polite persiflage."

"But, hang it all, I was as wet as she was," he exploded so violently that I knew his soul must have been tried to the utmost.

"We must try to make the best of it," I said. "It will not be for long." The thought of it somehow sent my heart back to its lowest level.

He was glum and silent for a few minutes. Then he said, as if the thought had been on his mind for some hours: "She isn't a day over forty-five. It doesn't seem possible, with a six foot son twenty-six years old."

Grimly I explained. "They marry quite young when it's for money, Fred."

"I suppose that's it," he sighed. "I fancy she's handsome, too, when she arms in such a way that my hands emerged from the confines of Poopendyke's sleeves. (Upon my word, I had no idea that he was so much longer than I!) "It is still I, countess, despite the shrinkage."

"The shrinkage?" she murmured, slowly sliding out of the chair. As she unbent her cramped leg she made a little grimace of pain, but smiled as she limped toward me, her hand extended.

"Yes, I always shrink when I get wet," I explained, resorting to face-tiousness.

Then I bent over her hand and kissed it. As I neglected to release it a once, the cuff of Poopendyke's best coat slid down over our two hands completely enveloping them. It was too much for me to stand. I squeezed her hand with painful fervor and then released it in trepidation.

"Poopendyke goes to church to-night," I said vaguely, leaving her to guess what it was that Poopendyke went to church in, or, perhaps, knowing what I meant, how I happened to be in it for the time being. "You've been crying!"

Her eyes were red and suspiciously moist.

As she met my concerned gaze, a wavering, whimsical smile crept into her face.

"It has been a disgustingly wet night," she said. "Oh, you don't know how happy I am to see you standing here once more, safe and sound, and—amiable. I expected you to glower and growl and—"

"On a bright, glorious, sunshiny morning like this?" I cried. "Never! I prefer to be graciously refulgent. Our troubles are behind us."

"How good you are!" After a moment's careful scrutiny of my face he added, "I can see the traces of very black thoughts, Mr. Smart, and recent ones."

"They were black until I came into this room," I confessed. "Now they are rose tinted."

She bent her slender body a little toward me, and the red seemed to leap back into her lips as if propelled by magic. Resolutely I put my awkward ungainly arms behind my back and straightened my figure. I was curiously impressed by the discovery that I was very, very tall and she very, much smaller than my memory recorded. Of course I had no means of knowing that she was in bedroom slippers and not in the customary big heeled boots that gave her an inch and a half of false stature.

"Your mother is here," I remarked hurriedly.

She glanced toward my bedroom door. "Oh, what a night!" she sighed. "I did all that I could to keep her out of your bed. It was useless. I did cry Mr. Smart. I know you must hate a lot of us."

I laughed. "Love thy neighbor a thyself," I quoted. "You are my neighbor, countess. Don't forget that. And it so happens that your mother is also my neighbor at present, and your brothers too. Have you any cousin and aunts?"

"I can't understand how any one can be so good natured as you," she sighed. The crown of her head was on level with my shoulder. Her eyes were lowered. A faint line of distress grew between them. For a minute I stared down at the brown crest of her head, an almost ungovernable impulse pounding away at my sense of discretion. I do take credit unto myself for being strong enough to resist that opportunity to make an everlasting idiot of myself. I knew even then that if a stu-isn't been ruined upon." We were halfway up the slope when I announced nervously that all of my clothing was in the closet off my bedroom and could not be got at under any circumstance.

"But," he said, "I have laid out my wet frock coat and trousers for you and a complete change of linen. You are quite welcome to anything I possess, Mr. Smart. I think if you take a couple of rolls at the bottom of the drawers they'll be presentable. The coat may be a little long for you, it's—"

My loud laughter cut him short.

"It's the best I could do," he said in an aggrieved voice.

I had a secret hope that the countess would be in the courtyard to welcome me, but I was disappointed. Old Gretel let me and wept over me, as if I was not already sufficiently moist. The butler came running out to say that breakfast would be ready for me when desired; Blatchford felt of my coat sleeve and told me that I was quite wet; Hawkins had two large, steaming puddles waiting for us in the vestibule, apparently fearing that we could get so far without the aid of a stimulant. But there was no sign of a single Titus.

Later I ventured forth in Poopendyke's best suit of clothes, the one he wears when he passes the plate on Sundays in faraway Yonkers. It smelled of moth balls, but it was gloriously dry, so why carp? We sneaked down the corridor past my own bedroom door and stole into the study.

Just inside the door I stopped in amazement. The countess was sound asleep in my big armchair, a forlorn little thing in a pink peignoir, her rumpled brown hair nestled in the angle of the chair; her hands clasped listlessly at her sides; dark shes lay upon the soft white cheeks; her lips were parted ever so slightly, and her bosom rose and fell in the long velle of perfect repose.

Poopendyke clutched me by the arm and drew me toward the door or I might have stood there transfixed for aye, I know how long.

"She's asleep," he whispered.

It was the second time in twelve years that someone had intimated that was blind.

The door creaked villainously. The aunt, ecclesiastical talls of my borrowed frock coat were on the verge of falling safely outside with me when I cried out, whereupon I swiftly unposed myself and stuck my head through the half open door.

"Oh, it's you!" she cried, in a quavery voice. She was leaning forward in the chair, her eyes wide open and glistening.

I advanced into the room. A look of doubt sprang into her face. She stared for a moment and then rather piteously rubbed her eyes.

"Yes, it is I," said I, spreading my arms in such a way that my hands emerged from the confines of Poopendyke's sleeves. (Upon my word, I had an idea that he was so much longer than I.) "It is still I, countess, despite a shrinkage."

"The shrinkage?" she murmured, slowly sliding out of the chair. As she unbent her cramped leg she made a grimace of pain, but smiled as she opened toward me, her hand extended. "Yes, I always shrink when I get wet," I explained, resorting to facelessness.

Then I bent over her hand and kissed it. As I neglected to release it at har attack ever came upon me again I should not be able to withstand it.

All this time she was staring rather pensively at the second button from the top of Poopendyke's coat, and so prolonged and earnest was her gaze that I looked down in some concern, at the same time permitting myself to make a nervous, jerky and quite involuntary digital examination of the aforesaid button. She looked up with a nervous little laugh.

"I shall have to sew one on right there for poor Mr. Poopendyke," she said, poking her finger into the empty buttonhole. "You dear bachelors!"

Then she turned swiftly away from me and glided over to the big armchair, from the depths of which she fished a small velvet bag. Looking over her shoulder, she smiled at me.

"Please look the other way," she said. Without waiting for me to do so she took out a little gold box, a powder puff and a stick of lip rouge. Crossing to the small Florentine mirror that hung near my desk, she proceeded before my startled eyes to repair the slight—and to me unnoticeable—damage that had been done to her complexion before the sun came up.

"Woman works in a mysterious way, my friend, her wonders to perform," she paraphrased calmly.

"No matter how transcendently beautiful woman may be, she always does that sort of thing to herself, I take it," said I.

"She does," said the countess with conviction. She surveyed herself critically. "There! And now I am ready to accept an invitation to breakfast. I am disgustingly hungry."

"And so am I!" I cried with enthusiasm. "Hurray! You shall eat Poopendyke's breakfast just to penalize him for failing in his duties as host during my unavoidable!"

"Quite impossible," she said. "He has already eaten it."

"He has?"

"At half past 6, I believe. He announced at that ungodly hour that if he couldn't have his coffee the first thing in the morning he would be in for a headache all day. He suggested that I take a little nap and have breakfast with you—if you succeed in surviving the night."

"Oh, I see," said I slowly. "He knew all the time that you were napping in that chair, eh?"

"You shall not scold him!"

"I shall do even worse than that. I shall pension him for life."

She appeared thoughtful. A little frown of annoyance clouded her brow.

"He promised faithfully to arouse me the instant you were sighted on the opposite side of the river. I made him stand in the window with a field-glass. No, on second thought, I shall scold him. If he had come to the door and shouted you wouldn't have caught me in this odious dressing gown. Helene!"

"It is most fascinating," I cried. "Adorable! I love filmy, pink things. They're so intimate. And Poopendyke knows it, bless his ingenuous old soul!"

I surprised a queer little gleam of inquiry in her eyes. It flickered for a second and died out.

"Do you really consider him an ingenuous old soul?" she asked. And I thought there was something rather metallic in her voice. I might have replied with intelligence if she had given me a chance, but for some reason she chose to drop the subject. "You must be famished, and I am dying to hear about your experiences. You must not omit a single detail. I"— were respectfully quiescent; I confess to a certain embarrassment myself.

She was a handsome woman with a young figure, a good complexion, clear eyes, wavy brown hair and a rich, low voice, perfectly modulated. No doubt she was nearing fifty, but thirty-five might have been your guess, provided you were a bachelor. A bachelor learns something about women every day of his life, but not so much that he cannot be surprised the day after.

I endeavored to set her mind at rest by politely reminding her that I could not have slept in the bed anyway, having been out all night, and she smilingly assured me that it was a relief to find a literary man who wasn't forever saying fat, stupid things.

CHAPTER XX.

I Indulge in Plain Language.

I TOOK them over the castle—that is, a part of the castle. Mrs. Titus would not climb stairs. She confessed to banting, but drew the line at anything more exhausting. I fear I was too palpably relieved when she declined to go higher than the second story.

"It isn't necessary, Mr. Smart," she said sweetly. "to go into the history of the wretched Rothboefens, as a Cook's interpreter might do. You see, I know the castle quite well, and I have had all the late news from my daughter."

Riley-Werkheimers and Rockworths. Jasper was enthusiastic. Something told me that I was going to like him.

My troubles began the next day, and at the rather unseemly hour of 8 o'clock in the morning. Collingraft came down the hall in a bath gown and slippers, banged on my bedroom door and wanted to know why he couldn't have hot water for his bath. He was too full blooded and all that sort of thing, he said, to take a cold plunge. Moreover, he wasn't used to taking his tub in a tin cup. (That was his sarcastic way of referring to my portable, handy bathtub.) I asked him why he didn't ring for Britton, and he said he did, but that Britton was assisting Jasper in a wild chase for a bat which had got into the lad's room during the night.

"Thank your lucky stars it didn't get into mother's room," he said surlily. I silently thanked them.

He made such a row about his tub that I had to give him the pail of hot water Britton had placed in my bedroom preparatory to my own bath.

At breakfast Jasper complained about the bats. He couldn't for the life of him see why I didn't have screens in the windows.

Later on Mrs. Titus, who had coffee and toast in her room, joined us in the loggia and announced that the coffee was stone cold. Moreover, she did not like the guest chamber into which she

It is I," said I, spreading my arms in such a way that my hands merged from the confines of Poopendyke's sleeves. (Upon my word, I had a idea that he was so much longer than I.) "It is still I, countess, despite the shrinkage."

"The shrinkage?" she murmured, slowly sliding out of the chair. As I unbent her cramped leg she made a little grimace of pain, but smiled as she moved toward me, her hand extended. "Yes, I always shrink when I get wet," I explained, resorting to face-ousness.

Then I bent over her hand and kissed it. As I neglected to release it at once, the cuff of Poopendyke's best nightgown slid down over our two hands, completely enveloping them. It was so much for me to stand. I squeezed her hand with painful fervor and then released it in trepidation.

"Poopendyke goes to church in it," said vaguely, leaving her to guess but it was that Poopendyke went to church in, or, perhaps, knowing what meant, how I happened to be in it at the time being. "You've been crying!"

Her eyes were red and suspiciously moist.

As she met my concerned gaze, a quivering, whimsical smile crept into her face.

"It has been a disgustingly wet night," she said. "Oh, you don't know how happy I am to see you standing here once more, safe and sound, and—indeed amiable. I expected you to growl and growl and"—

"On a bright, glorious, sunshiny morning like this?" I cried. "Never! I prefer to be graciously refulgent in my troubles are behind us."

"How good you are!" After a moment's careful scrutiny of my face she deduced, "I can see the traces of very sick thoughts, Mr. Smart, and recent ones."

"They were black until I came into this room," I confessed. "Now they are rose tinted."

She bent her slender body a little toward me, and the red seemed to leap back into her lips as if propelled by magic. Resolutely I put my awkward, gainly arms behind my back and lightened my figure. I was curiously impressed by the discovery that I was very, very tall and she very much smaller than my memory recorded.

Of course I had no means of knowing that she was in bedroom slippers and not in the customary high-heeled boots that gave her an inch and half of false stature.

"Your mother is here," I remarked briefly.

She glanced toward my bedroom door. "Oh, what a night!" she sighed. "I shall that I could to keep her out of my bed. It was useless. I did cry, Mr. Smart. I know you must hate all this."

I laughed. "Love thy neighbor as thyself," I quoted. "You are my neighbor, countess. Don't forget that. It is so happens that your mother is so my neighbor at present, and your mother too. Have you any cousins or aunts?"

"I can't understand how any one can be so good natured as you," she sighed. The crown of her head was on a level with my shoulder. Her eyes were veiled. A faint line of distress grew between them. For a minute I stared on at the brown crest of her head, almost ungovernable impulse pounding away at my sense of discretion. I take credit unto myself for being strong enough to resist that opportunity to make an everlasting idiot of myself. I knew even then that if a sim-

I surprised a queer little gleam of inquiry in her eyes. It flickered for a second and died out.

"Do you really consider him an ingenious old soul?" she asked. And I thought there was something rather metallic in her voice. I might have replied with intelligence if she had given me a chance, but for some reason she chose to drop the subject. "You must be famished, and I am dying to hear about your experiences. You must not omit a single detail. I"—

There came a gentle, discreet knocking on the half open door. I started.

"Come!" I said.

Blatchford gravely swung the door wide open.

"Breakfast is served, sir—your ladyship. I beg pardon."

I have never seen him stand so faultlessly rigid. As we passed him on the way out a mean desire came over me to tread on his toes just as an experiment. Somehow I felt that he would say, "Thank you, sir," and there would be no satisfaction in knowing that he had had all his pains for nothing.

I shall never forget that enchanted breakfast—never! Not that I can recall even vaguely what we had to eat, or who served it, or how much of the naked truth I related to her in describing the events of the night; I can only declare that it was a singularly light hearted affair.

At half past 10 o'clock I was received by Mrs. Titus in my own study. The countess came down from her eerie abode to officiate at the ceremonious function—if it may be so styled—and I was agreeably surprised to find my new guest in a most amiable frame of mind. True, she looked me over with what seemed to me an unnecessarily and perfectly frank stare of curiosity, but, on sober reflection, I did not hold it against her. I was still draped in Poopendyke's garments.

At first sight I suppose she couldn't quite help putting me down as one of those literary freaks who typify intellect without intelligence.

As for her two sons, they made no effort to disguise their amazement. (I have a shocking notion that the vowel "n" might be substituted for the "a" in that word without loss of integrity.)

The elder of the two young men, Collingcraft Titus, who being in the business with his father in New York was permitted to travel most of the time so that he couldn't interfere with it, was taller than I, and an extremely handsome chap to boot. He was twenty-six. The younger, Jasper junior, was nineteen, short and slight of build, with the merriest eyes I've ever seen. I didn't in the least mind the grin he bestowed upon me—and preserved with stanch fidelity throughout the whole interview—but I resented the supercilious, lordly scorn of his elder brother.

Jasper I learned was enduring a protracted leave of absence from Yale. The hiatus between his freshman and sophomore years already covered a period of sixteen months, and he had a tutor who appreciated the buttery side of his crust.

Mrs. Titus after thanking me warmly and, I think, sincerely for all that I had done for Aline, apologized in a perfunctory sort of way for having kept me out of my bed all night and hoped that I would not catch cold or have an attack of rheumatism.

I soon awoke to the fact that she was in the habit of centralizing attention. The usually volatile countess became subdued and repressed in her presence; the big son and the little one

"Of course," I agreed. "Stupid of me not to remember that you are descended from"—

"Mother isn't half as stuck up about it as you might think, Mr. Smart," interrupted Jasper junior glibly. "She prefers to let people think her ancestors were Dutch instead of merely German. Dutch ancestors are the proper thing in Jew York."

"Jappie," said his mother severely, "how often must I caution you not to speak of New York as Jew York? Some day you will say it to a Jew. One can't be too careful. Heaven alone knows when one is in the presence of a Jew in these days."

"Oh, I'm not Hebraic!" said I quickly. "My ancestors were Dutch. They came over with the original skin grafters."

She looked puzzled for a moment. The countess laughed. Then Jasper saw the point. Collingcraft was the last to see it, and then it was too late for him to smile.

We had tea in the loggia, and I dined with the family in the countess' apartment at 8 that night. I think Mrs. Titus was rather favorably impressed when she beheld me in my own raiment. Britton had smoothed out my evening clothes until they almost shone, and I managed to carry myself with unusual buoyancy.

Everything went very well that evening. We were all in fine humor, and the dinner was an excellent one. I perpetrated but one unhappy blunder. I asked Mrs. Titus if she knew the Riley-Werkheimers and the Rocksworthis in New York.

"Visually," she said succinctly, and I made haste to change the subject. The countess looked amused, and Collingcraft said something about it being more than likely that we did not have any mutual acquaintances in New York. His sister came to my rescue with a very amusing and exaggerated account of my experience with the

during the night.

"Thank your lucky stars it didn't get into mother's room," he said surlily. I silently thanked them.

He made such a row about his tub that I had to give him the pail of hot water Britton had placed in my bedroom preparatory to my own bath.

At breakfast Jasper complained about the bats. He couldn't for the life of him see why I didn't have screens in the windows.

Later on Mrs. Titus, who had coffee and toast in her room, joined us in the loggia and announced that the coffee was stone cold. Moreover, she did not like the guest chamber into which she had been moved by order of the countess. It was too huge for a bed-chamber, and the iron window shutters creaked all night long.

"But you love the view you have of the Danube?" I inquired rather mournfully.

"I don't sit in the window all night, Mr. Smart," she said tartly.

I at once insisted on her resuming possession of my bedroom and promptly had all of my things moved into the one she had occupied during the night. When the countess heard of this arrangement she was most indignant. She got me off in a corner and cruelly informed me that I hadn't the vestige of a backbone. She must have said something to her mother, too, for when evening came around I had to move back into my own room, Mrs. Titus sweetly assuring me that under no consideration would she consent to impose upon my good nature and hospitality to such an extent, etc.

During the day at odd times Collingcraft made lofty suggestions in regard to what could be done with the place to make it more or less inhabitable, and Jasper—who, by the way, I was beginning to fear I should not like after all—said he'd just like to have a whack at the thing himself. First thing he'd do would be to turn some of those old, unused rooms into squash and racket courts, and he'd also put in a swimming pool and a hot water plant.

Glories of the Divine Character Unknown to the World — Faint Glimpses Given to the Israelites — A Clearer Vision Given to the Church of Christ — Gross Darkness Covers the World.

Columbus, Ohio, Aug. 22.—Pastor Russell is in our city. We report his discourse on the text, "The glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together."—Isaiah 40:5.

The speaker first demonstrated that as yet the Divine glory has not been revealed to humanity. True, God gave Abraham some little intimation of His Purpose; but this was not a revelation of His glory; for only Abraham believed. While faith gave Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob a glimpse of God's character, they but faintly saw that sometime and somehow the curse of sin and death would be rolled away and the true knowledge of God would reach all mankind.

This hope, though vague, continued with Jacob's descendants, the Israelites. At Mount Sinai God made a Covenant with them that, if they would keep His Law, they might become the promised Seed of Abraham, to bless the world. (Genesis 12:3.) But neither they nor any others of the fallen race of Adam could keep the Law. (Romans 3:20.) As the hope of becoming the Spiritual Seed of Abraham faded from the Jewish mind, God encouraged them by declaring His purpose to make with them some day a still greater Covenant.—Jeremiah 31:31-34.

Jesus the Promised Seed of Abraham

Next the Pastor showed how Jesus and His Church constitute the Spiritual Seed of Abraham. (Galatians 3:8, 16, 29.) God sent His Son, "born under the Law" for the very purpose of demonstrating that a perfect man could keep the Divine Law, and redeem the fallen Adamic race. Jesus kept the Law. This did not constitute Him that Seed, however, but merely demonstrated His qualifications. Even though perfect, He could not have given life to the dying race of mankind. To do this, He must first lay down His own life as an equivalent price for Adam, in whom the race fell. On the third day God raised our Lord from the dead, fully qualified to bless mankind as Abraham's Spiritual Seed. He was no longer a man, but a spirit Being, privileged to make application of His own human life-rights as a redemption price for Adam and all his posterity.—1 Corinthians 15: 21-23.

The Bible declares that God also provided that a Church class should be gathered out of the world to be associated with our Lord in His future work. For about nineteen centuries all who have the hearing ear have been called to membership in Abraham's Spiritual Seed, of which Jesus is the Head. God first selected the worthy ones from amongst the

PROGRESS WITH THE DASHEEN

Successfully Grown in the South and in Arizona.

Ever since the federal division of foreign seed and plant introduction began its experiments with the dasheen this West Indian crop has proved itself well worth care, says the Country Gentleman. In 1900 the department recorded a South Carolina planting of dasheens that yielded at the rate of 400 bushels to the acre. Since then from less than five acres on the department's testing grounds at Brooksville, Fla., 1,400 bushels of dasheens have been harvested. From other plantings in Florida and Louisiana as much as twenty-two pounds of dasheens have been harvested from single hills.

In addition to the Florida, Louisiana and Carolina crops, the dasheen has been successfully grown near Norfolk, Va.; in Southern California and near Ray, Ariz. It promises well for use in irrigated sections of the southwest.

It would seem that the department's success with dasheen plantings fits in admirably with the new southern cam-sult. The eggs that are held for many days are apt to become chilled in weather, and the germ gradually grows weaker with time. Eggs for incubation in cold weather should be gathered twice daily, especially on cold days.

CHICKENS AND DUCKS ARE GENERALLY PROFITABLE.

and they must be kept in a warm room of rather even temperature until the eggs that have been chilled may start to hatch, yet in most cases the germ is so weak that the chick will not be strong enough to break the shell birth. There must be plenty of food for the eggs of a flock of chickens to be of high fertility. It is a good plan in filling the incubator to place more eggs in the tray than expected to carry through the two weeks period. When the eggs are tested for fertility the infertile ones are removed, which usually gives plenty of room in the tray for good eggs. In this manner a small sized hatch may be expected from machine. Never put in the eggs in the chamber has been heated for eight hours.

Guarding the health of newly hatched chicks is of prime importance. The first week is the critical time. There have been found certain degrees of infection in white diarrhoea bacilli. Some carry malignant infection, so slight that not many of the chicks has no longer a man, and a spirit Being, privileged to make application of His own human life-rights as a redemption price for Adam and all his posterity.—1 Corinthians 15: 21-23.

The Bible declares that God also provided that a Church class should be gathered out of the world to be associated with our Lord in His future work. For about nineteen centuries all who have the hearing ear have been called to membership in Abraham's Spiritual Seed, of which Jesus is the Head. God first selected the worthy ones from amongst the Jews, and then from amongst the Gentiles. (Acts 13:46.) But whether Jews or Gentiles, all must walk in the footsteps of Jesus—New Creatures in Christ.—2 Corinthians 5:17.

During all this time the glory of God has not been revealed. While our Lord knew about the Father's glory, and the Apostles had it clearly before their minds, yet not many, even of the early Church, could see it fully. Certain truths are dispensational, and cannot be understood until the due time. See Daniel 12: 8-13. In 1899 we entered the period called the Time of the End. Since then, those wise in Heavenly things have gradually understood the Scriptures. Bible students everywhere are witnesses to the fact that God has been opening His Word to their eyes of understanding. Great blessings have come to God's people during the last forty years.

God's Glory Soon to Be Revealed.

The remainder of the discourse was devoted to the Divine Purpose for the future. During the Millennial Age all flesh shall see the glory of God. Then Jehovah shall have everlasting praise. His long silence, His not defending Himself against His traducers, will ultimately rebound to His greater honor. (Isaiah 35:5; 42:8-13.) When the world really perceive that God is Love, they will experience a strong revulsion of feeling. The wrong thoughts entertained in the past will cause them to appreciate all the more the riches of the Divine character.

Mankind do not know what God's dealings are. They think that He has been most unjust—that He has tormented them in the present life, and will torture them hereafter. Only those can see differently whose eyes of understanding have been opened to see the depths of Divine Love and Mercy. By and by, when all mankind see and appreciate, "who shall not come and worship" before Him! To know our God is to love Him. The Scriptures declare that whoever will not come to reverence Him under the full light of the Millennial Day shall be cut off, as unfit for further Divine favors. From this Second Death there will be no resurrection.—Acts 3:19-23; 2 Peter 2:12.

Choice butchers' cattle, $7.75 to $8.25; good at $7.50 to $7.80; medium, $7 to $7.40; common, $6.50 to $6.85; light steers and heifers, $5.25 to $6; choice cows, $6.75 to $7; good cows, $6 to $6.60; medium cows, $5.50 to $6; common cows, $4.50 to $5.25; canners and cutters, $3.50 to $4.75; bulls at $3.50 to $6.75.

Stockers and Feeders.
Choice feeders, 900 lbs., $6.90 to $7; good feeders, 850 to 900 lbs., at $6.50 to $6.75; good stockers, 700 to 800 lbs., at $6.40 to $6.50; stockers, 600 to 700 lbs., at $6 to $6.25; common stocker steers at $5 to $5.50; stock heifers at $5 to $5.30.

Milkers and Springers.
Choice milkers and springers at $85 to $100; good cows at $70 to $82; common cows at $45 to $65.

Veal Calves.
Choice veal calves, $10 to $11; good, $9 to $9.75; medium, $7 to $9; common, $5.50 to $6.50; grass, $4.50 to $5.50.

Sheep and Lambs.
Light sheep, $6 to $7; heavy sheep at $3.50 to $5.50; yearlings at $7 to $8; lambs, $5.50 to $8.75.

Hogs.
Selects, weighed off cars, $9.40 to $9.65; $9.25, fed and watered; $9.00, f.o.b.; 50c is being deducted for heavy, fat hogs, and thin, light hogs, $2 off for sows, and $1 off for stags from prices paid for selects.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Sept. 6.—With the exception of hogs, all prices paid at the cattle markets today showed a loss of approximately 25c per cwt. There was a good attendance and a brisk business was done, but the offerings in nearly every instance were larger than the demand, which tended to create an easy feeling.

Select hogs, bought in fair quantities for export account sold from $9.50 to $9.65. Sows brought about $7.50, and stags from $5 to $6 per cwt., all weighed off cars.

Choice butcher cows were offered freely and the demand showed a considerable falling off compared with last Wednesday. Demand for lambs was also lighter. Offerings were at 8c per pound. Calves were easier.

Quotations: Butcher cows, good, $7.25 to $7.50; fair, $6.75 to $7; medium, $6.25 to $6.50; butcher bulls, $4.75 to $6.75; canning bulls, $3.75 to $4.25 per cwt.; canners and cutters, $3.25 to $4.25. Old sheep, 4½c to 5½c, and lambs 7½c to 8c per pound.

EAST BUFFALO LIVE STOCK.

EAST BUFFALO, N.Y., Sept. 6.—Cattle—Receipts 3800; irregular; prime steers, $9.25 to $9.50; shipping, $8.50 to $9.75; butchers, $6.75 to $8.85; heifers, $5 to $8.50; cows, $6.25 to $7; bulls, $4.50 to $7.25.

Veals—Receipts 1100 head; slow, $4 to $12.
Hogs—Receipts 12,800 head; active, heavy, $7.85 to $8.25; mixed, $8.40 to $8.60; Yorkers and pigs, $8.50 to $8.60; roughs, $6.25 to $6.50; stags, $4.50 to $5.50.

Sheep and lambs—Receipts 6400; slow and steady; lambs, $5 to $8; yearlings, $4.50 to $7.25; wethers, $6.25 to $6.50; ewes, $3 to $6; sheep, mixed, $6 to $6.25. Market irregular. Bees, $6.20 to $10.30; cows and heifers, $3.10 to $3.65; calves, $3 to $12.

LIVERPOOL LIVE STOCK.

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 4.—The cattle trade at Birkenhead this past week has remained unaltered, and quotations are as last given, namely 20c per pound, sinking the offer for Irish steers and heifers, with best qualities selling as high as 22c. There has been a much heavier supply of chilled beef, however, and quotations are considerably reduced, both North and South American now selling for 14c to 14½c per pound for the sides.

Riddle.

I live in wealth from week to week,
In poverty I live and meek.
You always see me in a pet
And always I am found in debt.
Alas, you find me in your fears!
'Tis I that help you make your tears;
But yet in happiness I dwell.
What is my nature—can you tell?

THE DASHEEN—TUBERS AND PLANTS.

paign for crop diversification. Not only does the dasheen promise well as a market crop once the public generally has recognized its merits, but in the meantime it is capable of furnishing food for home consumption. Its food value is higher than that of the potato.

Robert A. Young of the department says that in more ways than one the dasheen outdoes the potato.

"It can be grown as a summer crop in a region where the potato must be grown almost entirely as a spring crop," he argues, "for it ripens its tubers in October and furnishes them for the table at a season when northern grown potatoes have to be shipped in."

"The young leaves, properly cooked, can be substituted for spinach. The blanched shoots, obtained by forcing dasheen corms in the dark, constitute an entirely new product. The nutty flavor of the tubers gives them a peculiar palatability."

The larger tubers are ground into flour, which is used for soups and gruels and is mixed with wheat or rye flour to make griddle cakes, biscuits and bread.

At present the dasheen appears to be no more difficult to keep in storage than the sweet potato, but will usually keep well if stored in a dry place at a temperature of about 60 degrees F.

Making the Little Farm Pay

By C. C. BOWSFIELD

In the production of poultry meat farmers work in a slow and restricted way unless they procure a good sized incubator and give proper attention to its management. Nearly every farmer can make it pay to keep chickens and ducks. The sale of young fowls at two months is highly profitable, and a large trade can be worked up in a short time.

In filling an incubator care must be taken to secure the freshest kind of fertile eggs, and they must not be chilled. It is never a good plan to use eggs over a week old. The sooner they are placed in the incubator after being laid the better hatch will resulted for fertility the infertile or are removed, which usually gives plenty of room in the tray for good eggs. In this manner a good sized hatch may be expected from machine. Never put in the eggs in the chamber has been heated for for eight hours.

Guarding the health of newly hatched chicks is of prime importance. The first week is the critical time. They have been found certain degrees of infection in white diarrhea bacilli. Some carry malignant infection, so so light that not many of the chicks infected die with it. The infection passes from hen to hen by means of the nest litter. The original source of infection is from the ovary of a mother hen. The organism is in yolk. Chickens produced from the eggs have the disease when hatched.

The disease spreads from these other chicks through the infected food water or by the normal chicks going over the droppings. Infection would not take place from chick to chick if it were not for the sick chicks drinking and eating with the well. This is why the disease can be stopped by the instant removal of each drooping chick and a thorough cleaning out of its droppings. Especially is this more easily done for the well if the diseased does not show up in the infected until the third or fourth day.

The feeding of fresh buttermilk to the exposed was fully tried on certain farms where the disease appeared in year, and with due caution the results of the lactic acid treatment gave good results in large numbers of healthy fast growing chicks.

Don't buy eggs from yards where the disease was known to have been in year, as the same old infected hen may still be there.

Coops should be made windproof and water proof on all sides, which all means top and bottom. Rubber roofing is cheap material if kept painted. Roof the coops with. Ventilation best given above the door, the ventilator covered with screen wire and protected from rain. Roomy and dry is the idea. Everything should be kept clean and with good care to keep the comfortable and good wholesome feed including green food and free range any farm flocks should go through a summer in good condition, lay well and not die off.

Why Cows Give More Milk.

Cattle used to be bred chiefly for work, says the Farm and Fireside. Therefore the cows did not give much milk. Breeds improve the thing for which they are selected.

In 1790 the work cows of Germany gave an average of a pint and a half a day. Interest in milk increased, and by 1800 the average yield was a quart and a half. Breeding went on milkward, and in 1810 the German cow averaged two quarts of milk each per day. In 1820 three, in 1830 four, as there the gain stopped for thirty years. But in 1860 the production had increased to six quarts and by 1870 to eight.

More than two-thirds of the value of corn is on the ear and one-third in the stalk and blades, says the Farm and Fireside. The silo will save the thin which is usually as good as waste. Why save only two-thirds of the crop?

and they must be kept in a warm room rather even temperature until used. Eggs that have been chilled may start to hatch, yet in most cases the germ is so weak that the chick will not be strong enough to break the shell at birth. There must be plenty of male birds for the eggs of a flock of chickens to be of high fertility. It is often a good plan in filling the incubator to place more eggs in the tray than it is expected to carry through the three weeks period. When the eggs are tested for fertility the infertile ones are removed, which usually gives plenty of room in the tray for the good eggs. In this manner a good sized hatch may be expected from the machine. Never put in the eggs until the chamber has been heated for forty-eight hours.

TWO GREAT INVENTORS.

Their Foresight Did Not Equal Their Ingenious Ability.

Not infrequently great inventors do not comprehend the significance of the thing they have produced. An interesting anecdote of two famous men of science whose foresight did not equal their inventive ability appears in Les Inventions Illustrees.

When Hertz first began to obtain satisfactory results from his now famous researches into the possibility of transmitting electric waves certain men of science suggested that some day similar vibrations might serve to transmit messages through space. Hertz laughed at the hypothesis and assured all comers that his experiments were for laboratories only. Now, after a few short years, it is hard to find a single issue of a daily paper that does not record some noteworthy example of the use of wireless telegraphy.

Levassor was the great engineer who sketched the automobile with such skill that his design has not been materially changed to this day. After Levassor accomplished his historic trip from Paris to Bordeaux and return at the dizzy speed of about fifteen miles an hour his admirers gave him a banquet. During the toasts one of them, stirred by the spirit of the occasion, rose and enthusiastically called on the assembly to drink to the approaching day when carriages should travel at the speed of sixty miles an hour. Levassor turned to his nearest neighbor and asked in a quick undertone, "Why is it that after every banquet some people feel called on to make fools of themselves?"

CHINTZ FURNISHING

Beautiful Fabric Well Liked For Boudoir and Bedroom.

NEVER SO CHARMING AS NOW.

The Material Which Has Been Lent a Romantic Charm by Its Use In Old English Country Houses is Now Coming Into General Use In This Country.

Patterns of chintzes and cretonnes were never prettier than they are this season. Most of the new patterns are large, but there are still many charming patterns of chintz printed in the small block designs. Probably these old English patterns will remain a part of the stock in trade in chintz and cretonne for years, now that they have been so definitely revived. They are always suitable when a small patterned chintz is required.

In the illustration is shown one of these chintzes fashioned into a window draping quaintly charming. Valance and side curtains are draped over hem-stitched lengths of dimity.

This year, too, there are some very attractive designs with big pictorial patterns—of trees and landscapes, in tapestry fashion. They are especially suitable with colonial furnishings, and a white enameled, mahogany furnished bedroom with white paneled walls hung with one of the chintzes of this type would be charming.

The fad for black that came from Vienna by way of Paris into the world of interior decorating a few seasons ago has become a concrete factor in the patterning of chintz, and this spring there are many good designs that have much black in their coloring. Very often a definiteness and character can be gained by the use of a black and white chintz that no other colors could give.

Decorators and furniture makers realize each season more fully the decorative value of chintz, and this spring there are many new bits of boudoir and bedroom furniture upholstered in or made of chintz.

There are many charming lounging chairs—some on the conventional lines from note paper to biscuits to serve with the afternoon cup of tea.

It is a pretty fancy to place in a chintz furnished room a small white enameled basket with a trimming of little flowers in relief, of plaster or wood, colored in shades matching the cretonne. These baskets can be used for knitting, needlework, fruit or flowers.

Birdcages, too, are made in the same manner, and these lend another touch of daintiness and charm to the room they grace.

CHIC NOVELTY.

Hose That Carry Out the Idea of Military Boots Shown In Shops.

It sometimes seems that there is nothing new to be evolved in the way of smart hosiery, but a firm has demonstrated the fallacy of such an idea by presenting for women's consideration hosiery in which buttons and buttonholes, a line about the ankle and a tassel in the front simulate a high boot. These hose come in every conceivable color and are considered by the ultra smart as a very desirable addition to the list of novelties in hosiery. Below are given some hints which will be valuable about the care of silk hosiery:

With a little care and attention silk stockings may be made to wear two and even three months. If before wearing they are washed through luke-

TIMELY BEE WISDOM.

July is the month for gathering the first surplus, whether it be comb or extracted honey. It should be taken from the colonies not later than the twentieth of the month, thus keeping it separate from the later dark honey from buckwheat, asters, goldenrod, etc. The light honey is not only lighter in color, but more delicate in its flavor and brings about 2 cents a pound more.

In extracting make certain that about two-thirds of the cells in the extracting comb are sealed over to insure ripeness in the honey, which not only adds to its flavor, but also prevents fermentation when stored for later sale.

In uncapping the combs for extraction employ two uncapping knives, and while using one the other should be kept immersed in a pan of hot water over an oil stove and the knives frequently changed, as a warm knife uncaps more readily than a cold one and the cappings do not stick to it so much.

No bee escape board is required in taking the extracting combs from the colonies, as it makes little difference if the bees do uncup some cells when smoked down from the combs, but in the case of comb honey the smoking would defeat the purpose, as all uncapped cells render the combs unsightly and unsalable as first grade.

For this reason and the further one of saving annoyance from the bees, the bee escape board should be used when taking the comb surplus from the colonies and toward evening slipped in between the hive body and all of the comb supers and left there all night. By morning most of the bees will have gone down into the brood nest and can be removed from the supers without bother.

GROWING LATE CABBAGE.

Many farmers do not have a supply of late cabbage for winter because they neglect starting plants in mid-summer for the fall crop. Cabbage is one of the easiest vegetables to grow in the garden. A large patch should be set out late each summer, and the surplus may be sold or used for winter green poultry food. It is also very easy to keep through the winter.

Cabbage seed for the late crop may be sown any time in July, sowing in a rather moist and shady place. By mixing some sand with the soil inclined to be heavy the young plants will come out of the soil in a better shape for transplanting. The crop may be planted in the truck patch where an early crop of beans or peas has been growing. Replow the ground before planting and fertilize well with decomposed cow or other stable manure. Work the soil down with a harrow and disk to a very fine and firm seed bed. Have the rows from three to four feet apart to admit of cultivation with horse tools. As soon as a rain comes after the soil has been prepared set the young plants in rows about two feet apart, watering for the first two or three days, or until the roots begin to take hold of the new soil. Begin cultivation almost as soon as the crop is set out and continue during the growing period.

sisting of a comfortable deep upholstered chair of some sort with a wide, comfortable foot rest that is placed close against the chair and supports the knees, legs and feet.

White enamel furniture is often furnished with cushions and other embellishments of cretonne. One bedroom set shows chairs of white enamel cushioned in a chintz of rose, yellow—of a deep, soft shade—and dull blue. The writing desk, dressing table, bureau and bedside stand are all topped with glass, under which is a panel of chintz.

There is a screen with chintz panels, too, and various boxes and bags and cushions of the material add to the general effectiveness of the idea. Chintz curtains hang at the sides of the windows, with ivory white net over the glass to tone with the enamel.

One of the new ideas in bedroom furnishings is a hanging cupboard of chintz. This cupboard, of course, is washable, and it can be folded into small space. Therefore it would be ideal for the woman who stays at a hotel in the summer.

The shelves of the hanging cupboard are big enough to hold hats, underwear, shirt waists in neat piles and all the accessories of women's dressing. There are little clasped pockets on the inside of the cupboard occasionally, and these can be used to hold hairpins, handkerchiefs, manicure articles and other little knickknacks. The shelves are stiffened with boards, so that they are quite firm, but when the cupboard needs laundering the boards can be removed.

We are all used to the pretty and convenient little stands of enameled wood that hold boxes of cretonne. These stands are made in various shapes—for window seats, for dressing table, and just in the most convenient shapes to hold hat boxes or long flat boxes that accommodate blouses and light frocks.

Then there are the thousand and one little boxes and bags that add color to a room and at the same time prove convenient receptacles for everything the ultra smart as a very desirable addition to the list of novelties in hosiery. Below are given some hints which will be valuable about the care of silk hosiery:

warm water they become more glossy and also strengthened, as silk takes very kindly to water.

After each wearing also the stockings should be washed in lukewarm water and white soap.

If the stockings are white they should be put in a dark room to dry. Never dry white or colored stockings in the sun. The Japanese are said to put all white silks in a dark closet to dry. This will absolutely keep them from yellowing. The use of hot water, according to those who know, is prohibited in the washing of silks; also avoid rubbing.

And now as to the wearing of silk stockings. They absolutely must not be worn tight. If the stocking is pulled to its full length and caught at the hem there will be few if any "runners" occurring within a reasonable time. Wear your stockings comfortably, not too loose or too tight. One extreme is as bad as the other.

A stocking with a lisle top and foot will wear better than all silk one.

Drink Plenty of Water.

A Roumanian scientist claims that any one can live to be 100 years old, barring accidents, if he drinks enough water. He declares he has discovered that old age is due to a decrease in the amount of water in the system and that Father Time may be checked by systematic water drinking during middle age.

Buying Wives.

Wives are still obtained by purchase in some parts of Russia. In the district of Kamyshin, on the Volga, this is practically the only way in which marriages are brought about. The price of a pretty girl from a well to do family ranges from $100 to $200.

ANNOUNCEMENT

The following prices f.o.b. Ford, Ontario., effective Aug. 2, '15

Ford Runabout	$480.00
Ford Touring Car . . .	$530.00
Ford Town Car	$780.00

No speedometer included in this year's equipment, otherwise cars fully equipped.

There can be no assurance given against an advance in these prices at any time. We guarantee, however, that there will be no reduction in these prices prior to Aug. 1, 1916.

Profit Sharing with Retail Buyers

On August 1, 1914 we made the announcement that if we could make and sell at retail 30,000 Ford cars between August 1, 1914 and August 1, 1915 we would share profits with the retail purchasers. We have sold only 18,774 Ford cars in the time specified and, therefore, are unable to share our profits with those who purchased Ford cars between the above dates.

Our plan to profit-share with retail purchasers of Ford cars during 1914-1915 was not successful due to conditions which we could not possibly foresee at the time we made our announcement last August. The war and the consequent unsettled conditions of business seriously affected our sales and increased our manufacturing costs so that during the last year we did not earn a profit not required for the normal expansion of our business in a manufacturing and service way.

However we still have confidence in our profit-sharing plan, but a realization of the uncertainty of conditions generally makes it advisable to defer any announcement of future profit-sharing until a later date.

We are, however, positive we cannot reduce costs for several months, and therefore can offer no profit-sharing for cars delivered during August, September and October, 1915.

We are requested to say that the proceeds from the sale of ice cream and afternoon tea at the new drug store on Sept. 15th, are not for the Napanee Branch of the Red Cross Society.

At the regular meeting of the Quarterly Official Board of Trinity Church the following were elected District Visitors for the present conference year: R. J. Dickinson, H. Creighton, W. H. Cadman, Z. L. VanLuven, R. A. Beard, Wesley Dawson, J. W. Hall, Dr. C. H. Wartman.

The following is an extract from a letter received from a friend by one of our townsmen: "As I, an unbiased onlooker, stood aside and watched the passing show of your patriotic demonstration, I became possessed with several ideas. 1st—That your police force was quite inadequate, or that your town government was unable to use them. 2nd—That it was a great mistake giving the schools a half holiday. 3rd—That it was quite possible to clothe the god of war with drapery torn from the Statue of Liberty and Patriotism. 4th—That it was a pity that the hearts of your townspeople was so full of political party prejudice that a gentleman from a neighboring city should have been constrained to appeal to the audience for a decent hearing for a man that was used to standing before Kings."

a readable one, on "Live Decoy Ducks and shooting over them." "Duck Shooting in the Cariboo" is an amusing story of the experiences of two duck hunters who saw plenty of ducks but failed to shoot any. "After the Black Ducks," "Two Hundred Acres of Geese," "Duck Breeding in the Park Country, Alberta," are other stories that give a wild duck flavor to this number, and in addition there are other interesting stories of outdoor life besides the regular departments devoted to gunning and fishing. W. J. Taylor, Limited, Woodstock, Ont., are publishers of this magazine of outdoor life.

A striking illustration of the financial progress throughout the two older provinces of the Dominion during recent years, with respect to banking facilities, is graphically shown in a new edition of a bank map of Ontario and Quebec which has recently been issued by the Department of the Interior at Ottawa. According to the information which has been incorporated in the publication the number of branches in operation in 1901, the first year for which statistics of this nature are given, totalled approximately 500, in comparison with 2,000 at the present time. This interesting compilation of current banking information is valuable also as a railway map showing as it does the location, on the various main and branch lines, of all towns and cities. This, together with other general information, makes the publication very useful for reference purposes. A copy may be procured free of charge upon application to F. C. Lynch, Superintendent of the Railway Lands Branch, Department of the Interior, Ottawa.

This Year's Fair Will be a Hummer.

We refer to Picton Fair. If you miss it this year you'll miss one of the best—probably THE BEST, ever held hereabouts. Interesting and instructive exhibits in great variety. Thoroughbred horses, pure-bred stock, pure-bred poultry, labor-saving machinery, famous fruits, vigorous vegetables, household hints, attractive art—everything the best this section affords. Canada's greatest military band, the 48th Highlanders in attendance all three days. 'Twould be folly to stay away. Everyone else will be there, you might as well go too, so take the Str. Brockville to Picton fair on Wednesday, Sept. 22nd, and enjoy the last and best excursion of the season.

BLUTE—GRACE.

The marriage of Miss Nellie Mae Blute, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Blute, Napanee, and Mr. F. J. Grace, of Winnipeg, took place quietly at St. Patrick's Church on Monday morning, September 6th, Rev. Father O'Connor officiating. The bride, who was given away by her father, was attired in a suit of delf blue broadcloth, with which she wore corsage bouquet of Killarney roses and Lily of the Valley, and a large black velvet hat. Miss M. E. Blute, of Toronto, attended her sister as bridesmaid, and wore mahogany silk crepe de chene, with nosegay of tea roses and black velvet sailor. Mr. S. Grace, of Kingston, assisted his brother. The groom's gift to the bride was a platinum cavalier set with diamonds, the bridesmaid receiving a handsome pendant, and the groomsmen gold cuff links. The bridal party returned to the home of the bride's father where luncheon was served to immediate friends and relatives. The happy couple left on the noon train amid showers of confetti for points east before going to Winnipeg, where they will reside.

Brown-Kirk.

At sunrise, on Wednesday, 1st of September, in the old historic Church of Christ, Tamworth, the marriage was solemnized between Gilbert Brown and Miss Lulu Kirk, both of the township of Sheffield. Only very immediate friends were present. The bride wore a lovely white ivory satin dress, and a white hat with ostrich plumes, and was given away by her father, Mr. Robert Kirk. Miss Hunter in the absence of Miss Elsie Jones, presided at the organ, and the Rev. Rural Dean Jones officiated. Immediately after the service the happy couple motored to the rectory and the station, en route to Prince Edward county and Toronto. The bride's going-away gown was Joffe blue, with hat to match, and the groom's gift was a lovely cameo bracelet. Upon their return they will reside on the old Brown homestead, near White Lake. The bride is one of Tamworth's most popular young ladies and has for years occupied the honored position of organist of Christ Church. The happy couple enjoy the best wishes of a host of friends, many of whom will give them a warm reception upon their return.
